10,000 More Dead in India; New Temblor Rocks Quetta

Toll Reaches 40,000 as Other Shocks Add to Terror in Zone.

Crashing Houses Hamper Aid Work

Still Greater Casualties Feared; Thousands Flee From Area.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Quetta, British Baluchistan, India, June 2.—Another violent earthquake struck this devastated northwest frontier area today, adding to the desolation and terror of the panic-stricken survivors of Friday's shocks which took upwards of 20,000 lives.

The new quake occurred at 2:40 p. m. Walls already weakened fell crashing into the debris littered streets of Quetta, endangering the lives of rescue workers and natives.

[An Associated Press dispatch from Simla, India, reported unofficial estimates there placed the death toll in the series of quakes at 40,000—Editor's note.]

Thick dust rose over the town, choking soldiers searching in the tons of debris for survivors.

Telegraphic and telephonic communications were further shattered. Martial law remained in effect.

Authorities ordered the city entirely cut off at 7 p. m. None was allowed to enter Quetta until a complete evacuation of the congested native quarter had been effected.

New Casualties Feared.

The midafternoon quake, lasting 45 seconds, was feared to have increased the casualties, which already were believed between 20,000 and 30,000 natives and more than 200 foreigners, mostly British.

Authoritative quarters said at least 20,000 had been killed throughout the quake-torn region Friday, most of them trapped in their beds.

Fifty-seven members of the Royal Air Force were killed. They were in the cantonment outside Quetta, a strategic army outpost.

Many airplanes were damaged and not a building in the air depot escaped.

Thousands of bodies remain in Quetta and other razed hill villages. Many of the dead never will be found.

Soldier at Work.

British and native soldiers worked tirelessly seeking to locate and rescue survivors and destroy the bodies of the dead before pestilence sets in.

The entire military unit, with tanks and cavalry, guarded the ruins to prevent wild tribesmen from entering the town and looting.

Airplanes patrolled the frontier day and night.

Ten thousand refugees were evacuated on five trains Saturday and six Sunday. Other trains rushed food into the quake area, while medical supplies and physicians were brought by train and plane to carry on the rescue work.

Troops guarding Quetta were busy Sunday night shooting hordes of pariah dogs and jackals which descended on the shattered town.

The quake Sunday afternoon razed railway buildings between Sidi and Quetta. Rescue workers said many of the R. F. F. men were suffocated by thick dust raised by falling mud huts.

Youth, 19, Dies In Auto Crash

2 Others Hurt as Delivery Truck Overturns Near McLean, Va.

A 19-year-old youth was killed and two companions were injured early yesterday when a light delivery truck left the road and overturned three times on the Chain Bridge road, a half mile from McLean, Va.

The dead youth is Cecil Landis, who came to Washington two months ago from Harrisonburg, Va. The injured are James Morris, 19, 3317 Dent place northwest, who is in a serious condition in Emergency Hospital, and Thomas Allen, 16, 1205 K street northwest, who received slight injuries.

The three were headed for Washington. While rounding a curve, the truck left the road, struck a tree and overturned. Nearby residents who heard the crash called the McLean fire department, which took the men to Emergency Hospital.

Landis was dead when doctors examined him. Morris is under treatment for a fractured skull and fractured ribs. Allen was treated for minor head injuries. Landis lived at the home of Morris.

Kidnap Suspects in Tan Auto Elude Net in Oregon Badlands

Speeding Sedan Sought in Weyerhaeuser Case Slips From Law's Trap; Man Hunt Pressed Over Ever-Widening Area.

By the Associated Press.

Pendleton, Oreg., June 2 (AP).—A motor car load of hard-riding suspects in the George Weyerhaeuser kidnaping apparently slipped through the guard lines of a formidable police army in Oregon's badlands today, but the great man hunt continued with an ever-widening scope.

Flying squads of State police and deputy sheriffs raked the area all day, but returned to Pendleton tonight, reporting the sedan that thundered across the border from Washington last night apparently had eluded them.

This morning a mysterious car raced through Holman, in the bad lands area north of here, and was followed about 20 minutes later by six automobile loads of heavily armed officers, while a mysterious airplane droned overhead.

The Holdman car turned out to be one on duty in the hunt. The airplane was not identified, but it became known that naval planes from the Sand Point station in Washington had been cruising over the area on a separate mission.

Previously it was reported the kidnaping gang might sek to escape by air with their $200,000 ransom money. Oregon police disclosed they had been watching an iraaplne once reputedly owned by Jack "Legs" Diamond, late New York gangster. It was said the plane had ben moved into Oregon recently from the Los Angeles area.

Highways Guarded.

Highways of both Oregon and Washington still were watched by armies of police and sheriffs.

The always silent Federal agents continued work on the case in their own way. One of their moves was the broadcastings of descriptions of three suspects over the California State police teletype "purely as a precautionary measure." Plans were disclosed to broadcast serial numbers of the ransom money.

The manner in whch the suspected automoble outran Oregon officers and then got away when the officers had begun to thnk they had t bottled up was unusual.

The car, a big tan sedan supposedly containing five or six men, dashed into the State near Umatilla.

A sheriff's patrol car gave chase. The sheriffs' speeded up their car to 91 miles an hour, but the mysterious automobile outdistanced them so quickly that the officers didn't get the license number nor any view of the occupants.

It was regarded as certain that, in the vicinity of Gold Springs, the tan

Landlord Slain In Hagerstown; Roomers Held

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., June 2.—Eight boarders in the rooming house operated by David L. Buchanan, 79, retired merchant and churchman who was found murdered in a room of the rooming house htis morning, are held for questioning while local police set out for an unannounced destination in search of two men, who also had been boarders at the place. One of the men, a race track follower, checked out early today, according to information obetained from one of the eight suspects.

Sixty dollars worth of straight pari-mutuel tickets were found in one of the rooms at the Buchanan place. The eight suspects deny owning the tickets.

A heavy iron bar, the sharp end of which was matted with what appeared to be blood and white hair, found in the yard in the rear of the building, was believed tonight by police to have been the murder weapon.

Suspect Admits Drinking.

Thomas Riggs, found asleep in Buchanan's bed, was questioned tonight and denied having seen Buchanan. Rigg said he came to the rooming house to spend the night, and that he had been drinking. Not finding Buchanan in his room, he lay on the bed and recalled nothing more or heard no one until two boarders aroused him this morning, shortly before Buchanan's body was found in the adjoining room, he declared.

A second man questioned, Paul Mongan, 34, has a police record. He was taken into custory when he attempted to pawn a meat saw, which police say was identified as having belonged to Buchanan.

Riggs was found in the bed Bu-

Death Ends Thirst on Sahara For Englishwoman and Man

By the Associated Press.

Algiers, Algeria, June 2.—A searching party found the bodies of an Englishwoman and an Englishman on the scorching Sahara sands today and rescued two Frenchmen near death from thirst.

The woman, Mrs. Knight, the widow of an English aviator who committed suicide recently at Agadez, French West Africa, had slashed her wrist, apparently in an attempt to end her torture from thirst and heat.

A party of four, including Mrs. Knight, an English resident of Switzerland named Peyton, and two Frenchmen named Kneebret and Chavexus, left Agadez by truck on May 22 for Tamanrasset, Tawarek.

After the quartet were missing four days a party left Agadez to seek them. It found the Frenchmen on the fifth day of the search in a serious condition beside the truck near a dried-up river bed, 30 miles north of Ingessam.

When the Frenchmen were revived they said they had run out of both gas and water. A day later, despite the pleas of their companions, Mrs. Knight and Peyton left the shelter of the truck for the south, hoping to reach Ingessam and bring help.

The body of the woman was found 5 miles from the truck, her wrists slashed. She had left a note to English friends. Peyton's body was nearby. He had died of thirst.

Floods' Loss In West Put At 12 Million

Relief Workers Insist Deaths Will Reach 250 in Nebraska Alone.

Military Directs Rescue Efforts From Oxford; Plan Air Survey.

By the Associated Press.

Oxford, Nebr., June 2.—As southern Nebraskans mobilized today in search of victims of last week's twin disaster, the unofficial roll of known dead rose steadily and by 4 p. m. totaled 79 fatalities of flood and tornadoes.

Relief workers clung to their first estimates that the death list might reach 250 and the property damage was unofficially put at more than $12,000,000.

Shortly after the first report was relayed out of Benkelman by amateur radio men saying at least 11 were dead there, County Attorney Victory Westermark reached McCook from there by plane to report the dead at 17.

McCook's Toll Rising.

McCook's death list also mounted and was 17, to top the number of victims in any one community hit by the floods and tornadoes. Death lists were being made up at Parks, Miller, Trenton, Stratoon, Orleans, Holdrege, Cambridge, Franklin, Alma and Curtis as additional word came in.

Meanwhile, a tornado today in the York vicinity wrecked a barn and broke a telegraph line.

Another new center of destruction was the South Platte River Valley, where that stream swelled to a 2-mile-wide torrent and flooded a few homes at Big Springs.

Oxford took on a military atmosphere as Nebraska National Guardsmen led in the rescue work. Assisting in the search were five War Department motor boats and several smaller craft.

Aerial Survey Arranged.

With rescue work well under way, guard officers made plans for an aerial survey of the entire valley with four Army airplanes from Fort Cook and four American Legion planes from Grand Island.

Hundreds of sightseers and anxious relatives of missing persons crowded into Oxford to get information about the missing persons. Because of the small number of bodies found here so far, rescue workers expressed the belief that many bodies might be hidden for days beneath the driftwood and debris.

Many persons still were marooned on high places and driftwood islands. An airplane which arrived from Grand Island reported that a dozen persons on an island in the flood waters near Orleans waved clothing frantically to call attention to their plight.

Ruth Resigns, Fuchs Accepts With Pleasure

Babe Called 'Imbecile' for Quitting in Rage After Leave Refusal.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 2.—Babe Ruth and the Boston Braves parted company tonight in a fanfare of personalities as the club's president, Emil Fuchs, hinted the slugger was "an imbecile."

A few hours after Ruth announced he would go on the voluntary retired list, after characterizing Fuchs as a "double-crosser," his employer made public the Babe's unconditional release with the word "imbecile" attached to the player-second vice president.

"I will never play another game for the club as long as Fuchs remains. He double-crossed me," was the Babe's hot shot.

"Nobody but an imbecile would act as Ruth did," was one of Fuchs' retorts to reporters.

Babe in Lather.

The slow burning bomb that has had the baseball world going around with its fingers in its ears since the season started let go when Ruth accused Fuchs of refusing him permission to attend the ceremonies incident to the arrival of the French liner Normandie in New York on Tuesday. Ruth contended an injury suffered in Cincinnati would have kept him out of the line-up until Thursday.

Ruth talked himself into a lather in the clubhouse during today's game with the New York Giants. Fuchs gave no ground in an equally snappy answer.

"McKechnie (Manager Bill McKechnie) told me he couldn't have Ruth come and go as he pleased," Fuchs declared; "that he couldn't expect to have any discipline on the team under those conditions. You notice that as soon as Ruth made his announcement the Braves returned to their old form and started winning.

No Longer in Club.

"I never had any trouble with Ruth until I turned down his request to go to New York to help welcome the Normandie. Nobody but an imbecile would act as Ruth did under those circumstances."

Ruth said tonight he would be willing to play an exhibition game in Haverhill, Mass., tomorrow, but Fuchs ruled this out.

"We'll get along without him. He's not a member of the club now. If he doesn't want to disappoint the fans at Haverhill, let him go up there and play with Haverhill

Installment XVI—Needles in the Haystack (Part 2)

This is the sixteenth installment of "American Messiahs," by the Unofficial Observer, author of the "New Dealers," which appeared last year. While "American Messiahs" does not necessarily reflect the editorial opinion of The Post, it is commended as a most candid discussion of the mavericks, the reformers and the radio spellbinders, now booming their way across the American political stage.

V.

In view of the heated character of prairie politics it is probable that the best way to promote a political cause west of the Mississippi is to avoid public office, with its impeachments and its auditors. Milo Reno, the Iowa firebrand, who has combined a profitable insurance business with a radical farm program for many years, is too wise to jeopardize his influence by accepting legal responsibility of any sort.

Reno is the man who gave the Nation the Farm Holiday movement, the "penny auctions" against mortgage foreclosures, and the "milk strikes." These weapons of desperate farmers, first tried in Iowa, became a national institution in 1932 and 1933 and did much to put a real head of steam back of the opening phases of the New Deal. With the success of the Roosevelt Administration in relieving some of the pressure of farm debt and boosting the price of basic farm commodities, Reno and his following began to slip.

Milo Reno was born in Agency, Iowa. He is 70 years old. He comes by his "radicalism" legitimately. His father was a fireman and a Granger and his mother was a Greenbacker and later a Populist. Milo went to Oklaloosa College in Iowa and studied theology but has been a bona fide farmer and for many years he has been active in the Farmers Union. In 1920 he was a rather obscure delegate to an Iowa State convention of the Farmers Union and attracted attention by his speeches which were and still are of the school of William Jennings Bryan.

He is now president of the National Farm Holiday Association. He runs some mutual insurance

Borah Dares New Deal To Test the Constition; Labor to Aid Roosevelt

Leaders Are Summoned Here to Map Fight on Wage Cuts.

Word Due Soon From White House

No Hint Yet Given of Plans for Offsetting Court Decision.

Determined to resist to the utmost any attempts, as a result of abandonment of NRA codes, to lower wages and living standards, organized labor yesterday called a council of war to meet in Washington on Thursday.

In issuing a call for a special meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor on that day, William Green, federation president, said that labor "must now resort to the use of its economic strength." It was the same expression he used in his New York speech in which he predicted general strikes if the national industrial recovery act was not extended.

Members of Congress and presidential advisers spent the week-end continuing their study and discussion of the results of the Supreme Court decision holding codes invalid, but there was no indication that any plan had been formulated or even that there would be an immediate plan. Suggestions still were coming from all sides, with a proposal for a constitutional amendment predominant among them.

Shouse Blames Administration.

Jouett Shouse, president of the American Liberty League, issued a statement blaming the Administration for confusion arising from the NRA opinion, and declaring that the decision was intended to benefit the great mass of the people.

Opinion concerning President Roosevelt's interpretation of the decision, in which he contended that it halted Federal control over the economic and social future of the country, continued to be sharply divided.

Through it all President Roosevelt was cruising on Chesapeake Bay, leaving behind him no hint of his next move, but apparently waiting for further crystallization of public opinion. Another White House statement concerning NRA is expected early this week. The President returned to Washington by automobile from Annapolis, early last night.

Congress Action in Doubt.

Both branches of Congress were ready to meet today with social security, banking, utility holding company and AAA legislation still pending, but with a shadow of doubt cast on all of them by the decision. No move for any stop-gap measure resulting from the decision is expected pending word from the White House. The House will meet after having abandoned all business for a week following the court ruling. Members of both Houses were preparing for an indefinite stay in Washington.

The call for the meeting of the A. F. of L. executive committee, representing some 3,000,000 organized workers, came as officials of the United Mine Workers of America completed plans for a walkout of 450,000 bituminous coal miners two weeks from today.

In his call for the meeting Green said that "the decision of the court must be interpreted as a severe and stunning blow to economic advancement and social justice progress.

"The gains which the workers made during the past two years under the operation of the national recovery act have been wiped out," Green said. "The Nation now returns to child labor, sweatshop conditions, long hours, reduced pay and intolerable conditions of employment.

"The millions of unorganized workers who lack economic power and economic strength because of their unorganized condition will now be exploited as never before."

Green said that reports reaching

Swiss Ballots Firm for Gold, Ban Devaluing

Voters Reject Expansion Proposal; Majority Nearly 150,000.

By the United Press.

Zurich, Switzerland, June 2.—The Swiss people today rejected a proposal which would have resulted in devaluation of the Swiss franc, and recorded their firm support of a stable, gold standard currency.

In a national plebiscite on a so-called "expansionist" provision in the constitution, they rejected the experiment by a majority of nearly 150,000 votes. The final revised figures on the plebiscite vote rejected the amendment, 570,302 to 424,033.

The ballot demonstrated the determination of Switzerland to safeguard the Swiss franc and prevent financial experimentation which experts predicted would result in instability and possibly inflation.

The vote aroused intense interest throughout Europe as well as in Switzerland's cantons, for the Swiss franc's position is vital in the gold bloc situation on the continent.

The vote specifically was on the question of whether the government should be commanded by popular vote to reverse its policy and adopt an "expansionist policy" which in general terms would "prevent further lowering of wages and prices, which will help the debtor classes and which will guarantee sufficient subsistence to all citizens, both employed and unemployed."

Had the voters declared in favor of this move, the government, under the constitution, would have had to obey. A campaign to educate the people against this move, however, apparently succeeded, and although 355,000 voters originally signed the petition demanding the plebiscite, they were unable to swing sufficient support to carry the country.

Court's NRA Decision Simply Upheld Law, He Tells Critics.

Says People Alone Can Decide Change

By Felix Bruner.

If the United States is to become "one unbroken empire" the people and no one else should make it so, Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, declared in an eloquent radio address last night in defense of the Supreme Court NRA decision.

Answering President Roosevelt's declaration that the decision had broken down the rule of the Federal Government and had returned control of the country's economic and social future to the States, Senator Boran took up point by point the court's decision, declaring each point was based upon the clear intent of the Constitution.

In the course of his speech the Senator quoted at some length statements made by President Roosevelt, when he was Governor of New York, in defense of the preservation of the sovereign rights of States.

Says "Let People Decide."

"Modern forces — political and economic—are chafing under the restraint of our written Constitution," he said, "It may be that it is destined to go.

"The political philosophy of Gen. Johnson, Mr. Richberg, and Dr. Tugwell may supplant the political philosophy of Gen. Washington, Madison and Jefferson.

"The only thing I shall urge is that in the matter of the change the people be consulted. The Constitution should not be changed by the Supreme Court. It should not be changed in Washington. It should be changed by the people alone."

Senator Borah said that the court decided three main questions: First, that the court in rendering decisions is bound by the written terms of the Constitution; second, that Cngress alone, under the Constitution as it now stands, possesse the legislative power of the National Government; third, that the States alone my legislate touching matters wholly within the State.

He said that critics of the court seem to disagree with all three decisions. He said that during recent years the theory has grown up that when the President and Congress declared an emergency exists "this in some way enlarges the power of the Congress and the Executive under the Constitution."

"A decision of the court based upon the theory that the court could consider anything other than the terms of the Constitution itself would leave a complete judicial oligarchy," he said. "It would leave the question of the extent of power t the determination of thse exercising pwer—a complee definition of despotic power."

Frames Amendment.

The second propositin which the curt decided. Borah said, "was that Congress, elected by the eople, alone may make the laws of the people. This is an old theory. It cost the friends of liberty a vast amoount of blodoshed in order to establish it. At least tw great wars were fought upon the subject."

Borah declared that under the NRA at least 5,000 laws were promulgated by the executive department, the violation of which would constitute crimes.

"The criticism of the decision," the Senator continued, "means nothing less than that the law-making departments should include the executive department. If the people of this country want the executive department to have unlimited power to make laws for every conceivable activity of the citizen, violation of which would send a man to jail, they at least should have an opportunity to pass upon the question.

"I undertook to frame an amendment. I wanted to get the full

Merchants Knife Price Cutters By Buying Below-Cost Goods

By the United Press.

Los Angeles, June 2.—Retail merchants tonight were organizing a mass "buying threat" in an effort to curb cut-rate selling that followed the collapse of the NRA, by the simple expedient of buying up all below-cost goods offered for sale.

A one-day campaign started yesterday appeared likely to sweep into a wholesale war on all cut-rate merchants, threatening loss of thousands of dollars to merchants offering below-cost prices as an inducement for patronage.

One chain store organization started raids by advertising that it would buy up all below-cost merchandise brought them by customers. Immediately merchants advertising cut-rate prices found themselves swamped by customers who bought their cut-rate merchandise in wholesale lots, but failed to equalize it by purchasing regularly priced goods.

The Retail Grocers Association said the campaign would result in losses of more than $300,000 a month to cut-rate sellers in Los Angeles.

Cut-rate stores reportedly were preparing to curtail sales tomorrow when they open for business, in an effort to block a threatened stampede.

New Air Bases Due for Action In House Soon

By the Associated Press.

A measure to add half a dozen powerful air bases to the Nation's defenses is scheduled for House action Wednesday—claimed to have the approval of President Roosevelt and the State Department.

Representative Wilcox (Democrat), Florida, author of the bill, said House leaders had assured him it would be brought up Wednesday. He added that he did not believe an international flurry which centered recently around the bill had jeopardized its chances for a favorable vote.

Foreign reverberations were caused by the revelation of secret testimony of ranking Army generals, during hearings on the measure, that it contained a "camouflaged" provision for a base on the Canadian border, and that in an "emergency" the United States must be prepared to seize British and French islands near American shores. President Roosevelt sternly consured the committee for making this testimony public.

Roosevelt Backing Bill.

Since that incident, Wilcox said he has been advised definitely by the White House that the President wants the bill enacted, and by the State Department that it considers no modifications necessary.

The War Department would be directed under the legislation to consider these areas in picking out sites for the strategic bases: Atlantic Northeast, Atlantic Southeast and Caribbean, Southeastern States, the Pacific Northwest, Alaska, the Rocky Mountains.

In addition, the measure would authorize "such intermediate stations as will provide for transcontinental movements incident to the concentration of the general headquarters air force for maneuvers."

Offered to Alter Provision.

This was the language referred to as camouflaged to permit construction of a base in the Great Lakes area.

Wilcon said he had offered to alter the "camouflaged" provision, but the State Department told him it was not necessary.

To any sharpshooting at the bill on the floor because of that proviso, he is prepared to fire back figures about Canadian airbases. Wilcox contended that five of the six dominion bases are within 86 miles of the American boundary.

"But that does not mean anything," he asserted, "because we are friendly with Canada and always will be."

Her First Leap Aims to Aid Student Instruction.

Prospertown, N. J., June 2.—Amelia Earhart made her first parachute jump here today, in a device which naval and Department of Commerce officials said would be valuable for student instruction.

The famous woman flier was one of several persons to try out the device, which was inspected by Eugene Vidal, of Washington, air director of the Department of Commerce, and other officials.

Miss Earhart was raised to the top of a 115-foot tower and made the descent in a parachute which had been held open, guided to the ground by cables.

Lafayette, Ind., June 2.—Amelia Earhart will join the faculty of Purdue University in the fall as consultant in the department for the study of careers for women.

Miss Earhart also will serve as technical adviser to the department of aeronautics, of the university, the announcement stated.

'Crucified' Carolinian, Improving, Reads Bible

High Point, N. C., June 2 (AP).—J. R. Riggs, High Point filling station operator, who had his 15-year-old son, Daniel, "crucify" him in hope of regaining his estranged wife's affections, spent today in reading his Bible.

"It is the Lord's will," said the 36-year-old Riggs as he thumbed his Bible on his hospital bed. He seemed to suffer no pain from the wounds in his hands and feet made when he had his son spike him to a rough cross of boards near his filling station early yesterday. Hospital attaches said Riggs would recover and would not be maimed, unless blood poison or some other complication developed.

Republican Chiefs Take on New Vitality From Rooseveltian Transfusion of Politics.

By Raymond Clapper

ANYONE who has stood at a hospital bedside during a blood transfusion and seen the color come flushing back into the cheeks of a drooping patient can visualize what has happened to the Republican Party in the last few days.

The effect of Mr. Roosevelt's decision to make an issue of the Supreme Court's wrecking of NRA has been to rejuvenate the Republican Party at the moment when its future seemed most hopeless.

* * * *

Some Republican leaders had been so discouraged that they were saying privately the party might as well hope for nothing until 1940. Others, feeling the party was approaching bankruptcy, were seriously considering looking for a likely young anti-Roosevelt Democrat to carry their banner—Lew Douglas being one of their best prospects. Midwest Republicans had, in a spurt of hope, promoted the Midwest conference to be held at Springfield, Ill., next week, but even during the preliminary discussions they drifted into wrangles.

Organization plans for staging an anti-New Deal farm demonstration at the meeting were clouded by the overwhelming wheat belt vote for continuing the AAA wheat program.

A few brave voices were heard, but they echoed rather hollowly. On the whole, the Republicans were a licked, bewildered, worn-out, tired-out, discouraged lot. They wandered around looking as sick as the Schechter chickens.

* * * *

Even when the Supreme Court spoke, they expected Mr. Roosevelt to bow to the verdict, leaving them at best the doubtful advantage of saying, "We told you so." What hope they had of building a campaign issue on NRA bureaucracy seemed to have been swept aside by the court decision. By next year, they figured, Mr. Roosevelt would have pulled down the New Deal experiments so far that the Republicans would have to content themselves with pointing in horror to last year's bird's nests.

* * * *

Then Mr. Roosevelt came out with his appeal over the head of the Supreme Court to the country. Santa Claus himself would have been no more welcome at Republican national committee headquarters. It was manna from heaven on a silver platter.

And this is why:

First, Mr. Roosevelt has crystallized the numerous aspects of the New Deal into a specific, clear-cut, readily debatable issue giving to the Republicans the side which appeals to the conservative traditions of their party, making them the guardians of the Constitution—as it now stands—the upholders of the authority of the Supreme Court, the opponents of Washington bureaucracy, the advocates of free individual enterprise as against regimentation. That is the way the political argument will run and it is a tune of which the main body of Republicanism is fond.

Second, Mr. Roosevelt has provided Senator Borah and similar-minded independent Republicans with a bridge over which they can get back to the main Republican army. Senator Borah has been leading the protest against old guard control of the Republican Party. But now that Mr. Roosevelt has raised the issue of preserving the Constitution as is, Senator Borah, already a violent critic of NRA, can figure himself pushed completely into the arms of the dominant Republican group again. Borah says we don't need a constitutional amendment nearly so much as we need people who will draw legislation in accord with the Constitution. Unable to unite themselves, Republicans are drawn nearer together by Mr. Roosevelt's challenge.

Third, Mr. Roosevelt has in effect given conservative Democrats a strong push toward the Republicans. At heart there is little question but that men like Senator Glass, Gov. Ritchie, John W. Davis, Alfred E. Smith and a host of Democratic Senators and Representatives, many from the South, are more in sympathy with the Republicans on this issue than with the Democrats. How many of them would jump their life-long party affiliations because of it is another question. Unquestionably some of them will publicly show their disapproval of the Roosevelt position. Assuming that they will not carry any State Democratic organizations over to the Republican side, their individual utterances will undoubtedly have considerable effect upon independent voters.

Fourth, Mr. Roosevelt has thrown into the Republican lap whatever aid and comfort is to be derived from the States' rights issue. True this has long been a distinctly Democratic issue. It is strongest, of course, in the Democratic South. For that reason its effect is somewhat nullified. Also, it is in the heart of the States' rights area that the most extreme of the regimentation measures have been applied, the Bankhead compulsory cotton control act, and it has met with strong support in most parts of the South. Result in the South in this issue is questionable so far as practicable effect on the presidential election is concerned. It will further alienate Talmadge and Long though with possibly no observable political effect beyound the damage they would have done anyway.

But the jeopardy to States rights does have important potentialities outside of the South. It tends to throw into the arms of the Republicans State officials and legislators and the political organizations with which they are affiliated. This is where the new Roosevelt issue may have its greatest effect upon political organization: The Republicans may be expected to play hard upon this local jealousy of the Federal Government, and tap the grass roots of local organizations.

* * * *

This is not to say that Mr. Roosevelt has delivered himself into the hands of his enemies.

He has given them an issue which will serve to revitalize them. But as was pointed out here last week, Mr. Roosevelt has powerful influences on his side—the vast numbers who have a stake in the New Deal through AAA, NRA codes, work relief.

Labor is likely to side with Mr. Roosevelt. Enemies of the old order will support him. The fact that he and Congress have been thwarted by a court appointed under previous Presidents, that the forces which opposed him in 1932 are back with augumented strength, the threat that restraints on stock market speculation may be wiped out, all of these elements will play in favor of Mr. Roosevelt.

* * * *

The difference is that with the horse and buggy issue Mr. Roosevelt has made 1936 a hoss race—in deference to the Supreme Court he would call it a harness race.

Patches of New Snow Observed on Mars

By the Associated Press.

Flagstaff, Ariz., June 2.—E. C. Slipher, astronomer at Lowell Observatory here, reported today the presence of patches of new snow in the vicinity of the north polar cap of Mars—the first time in the 30 years he has studied the planet that snow has formed in the northern hemisphere, at this season.

"Patches of a glistening substance which looks exactly like ice-caps have been noted on recent nights," Slipher said, "although the season there is early August."

Mars, recognized by most astronomers as a comparatively inert planet, has been "cutting up" in another respect, Slipher reported, in that its cloudiness has diminished during the summer months after being unusually heavy during the spring.

Helen Barclay Wed And the Secret's Out

Hollywood, June 2 (AP).—Helene Barclay, former wife of McClelland Barclay, the artist, and Gregg Toland, motion picture cameraman, today claimed something of a record for secret marriages in this movie capital where secrets are everybody's business.

Miss Barclay revealed that she and Toland were married at Santa Fe, N. Mex., September 23, 1934.

Miss Barclay is the daughter of Mrs. South Haskin, socially prominent in New York and King George, Va. She has turned to writing since her divorce from Barclay in 1933. Toland, chief cameraman for Samuel Goldwyn, producer, is a native of Illinois.

Three Nazis Jailed At French Border

Seized While Bicycling Near Defense Works.

By the Associated Press.

Metz, France, June 2.—Three Nazis bicyling in French territory near the defense works around Saareguimines were arrested and jailed today by French mobile guards.

In an effort to halt increasing frontier incidents the government has redoubled its watch.

The Nazis, two of whom were dressed in uniforms of Storm Troopers and were armed with the customary poniards, told military authorities they lost their way and thought they were still in the Saar. They were jailed for further questioning.

A German civilian plane, piloted by a Berlin doctor with an industrialist of Friedburg as a passenger, landed at the Saareguimines Airport today. They said they thought it was Saarbrucken. They were permitted to return to Germany.

Walter Bacon Elected Mayor of Wilmington

Wilmington, Del., June 2 (AP).—Walter W. Bacon, Republican, was elected Mayor of Wilmington in yesterday's municipal election.

He defeated Dr. William H. Speer, Democratic incumbent, by an unofficial vote of 20,264 to 13,865.

Republicans hailed the election as their greatest victory in a quarter century. Their entire ticket, with the exception of councilmanic candidates in the Tenth, Eleventh and Twelfth Wards, was elected.

NRA Decision Seen as Barrier To Cotton Loan

By the Associated Press.

Regarding the AAA as shaken by the Supreme Court's NRA decision, some officials said yesterday they believed extension of the 12-cent loan on cotton to cover the 1935 crop might be affected by the ruling.

While various predictions about extension of this loan peg on prices have been made, AAA officials steadfastly have refused to comment. They said no prediction or comment of any kind could be made until after the first 1935 cotton crop estimate in August.

However, some AAA experts said privately that in view of the expected decision of the Supreme Court on the Bankhead cotton control law in the fall and the uncertain course of action now facing the entire farm program, there might be some hesitancy in granting a new loan.

Extended to February 1.

The 12-cent loans on the 1934 crop, due to expire July 1, recently were extended until February 1, 1936.

AAA records showed that 10 and 12 cent loans, for 1933 and 1934, on approximately 4,800,000 bales in the cotton pool, totaled more than $47,800,000.

The 10 and 12 cent loans on cotton outside the pool, a total of 4,387,649 bales, were said to aggregate $267,686,797.

Officials said that of the total loans, the Government actually advanced only $33,171,000 in cash. The remainder of the loans was handled by banks, with the paper guaranteed by the Government.

Changes Due.

Extension of the cotton loan was one of the problems believed under consideration by Administration farm officials as they drafted amendments designed to strengthen the entire farm program against constitutional challenge. These were scheduled for completion by today or tomorrow.

No definite word could be obtained concerning content of the changes. However, it was believed that the amendments would include marketing agreements, but would eliminate the controversial licensing provisions of the AAA. Some form of Federal rules and regulations, such as those utilized by the Federad Trade Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission, promptly would be substituted for the licensing provisions.

Erie Freight Docks Are Swept by Fire

Incendiarism Suspected as Lake Port Is Crippled.

By the Associated Press.

Erie, Pa., June 2.—Fire swept two large freight docks of the Pennsylvania Railroad this evening, causing damage estimated by Fire Chief Michael Leonard at "several thousand dollars," and crippling shipping from this lake port.

Every available fireman in Erie rushed to the scene as the flames, aided by lake winds, rapidly swept over the wooden structures an eighth of a mile long.

A number of explosions occurred, sending showers of sparks out over the harbor and endangering ships. The Coast Guard cutter Petrol went to the aid of firemen, who were hampered by the intense heat.

The fire also threatened a rich cargo of pulpwood and the coal dock.

The fire chief said the fire spread so rapidly that there was evidence of incendiarism.

Pope Claims Farmers Are Pleased With AAA

Doylestown, Pa., June 2 (AP). United States Senator James P. Pope, of Idaho, in an address today at Founder's Day exercises at the National Farm School said the agriculture adjustment act "from the farmers' viewpoint" is a success.

"In spite of the anguished howls of partisan critics over 'plowing under little pigs,' the basic principle of this act is cooperation among the farmers on a voluntary, democratic basis," Pope, a member of the Senate Agricultural Committee, asserted.

The exercises were held in memory of the late Rev. Dr. Joseph I. Krauskoff, noted Philadelphia rabbi who founded the school.

Presbyterians Urge Sabbath Observance

Montreat, N. C., June 2 (AP).—A plea that Sabbath observance be made a "major objective" of the Presbyterian Church in the United States was made to the denomination's general asembly yesterday as it plowed through a mass of routine business.

At the afternoon session, 1936 was officially designated jubilee year, marking the senventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Southern-Church in Augusta, Ga.

Nation's Relief Load Is 3.6% Lower in April

Hopkins Reports Decline in Families on Rolls, But Rise in Costs.

By the Associated Press.

A decline in the Nation's relief burden during the first weeks of spring was reported yesterday by Harry L. Hopkins.

The relief administrator said the number of families on relief rolls during April was 3.6 per cent below the March figure.

The April total was given as 4,260,423 families as compared to 4,419,600 in March.

Despite this drop, emergency relief costs gained nearly 1 per cent between the two months. The April cost was $189,295,204 against $188,049,481 for March.

New Mexico Out in Front.

Leading the parade of States in percentage decreases was New Mexico, where relief families dropped from 28,882 in March to 22,916 in April—a drop of 20.7 per cent.

Mississippi, with 51,054 families on relief in March and 42,331 in April, was second with a decrease of 17.1 per cent. Other States to show relief declines greater than 10 per cent were South Carolina, with 52,760 families in March and 46,187 in April, a decrease of 12.4 per cent; Texas, with 229,076 families in March and 203,932 in April, a drop of 11 per cent, and Oklahoma, with 136,090 in March and 122,332 in April, a decrease of 10.1 per cent.

Ten States Gained.

Ten State showed gains in families on relief.

They were Alabama, 8.3 per cent; Virginia, 5 per cent; New Hampshire, 4.8 per cent; Maine, 3.7 per cent; Massachusetts, 3.3 per cent; Tennessee, 2.3 per cent; Kentucky, 2 per cent; Louisiana, 1.6 per cent; Idaho, 0.09 per cent, and North Carolina, 0.6 per cent.

New York State, with the greatest number of families on relief, showed a decrease of from 483,685 in March to 461,200 in April, a drop of 4.6 per cent.

Pennsylvania's relief families decreased from 403,667 to 399,636 or 1 per cent in the month; Illinois' from 321,001 to 313,960 or 2.2 per cent, and California's from 198,338 to 191,199 or 3.6 per cent.

Lawrence Manuscript Revealed in England

London, June 2 (AP).—Lawrence of Arabia left a manuscript recording his life in the Royal Air Force, it was disclosed tonight, with instructions that it should not be published before 1950. Export Tie-Ups In Silver Buying Urged by Dies

Take Metal From Nations That Will Purchase U. S. Crops, He Advises.

By the Associated Press.

An author of the silver purchase act yesterday proposed a drastic change in administration of that law which he said would "stop the downward trend of our export trade and remove the constant threat that hangs over the cotton market."

Next week, added Representative Dies (Democrat), Texas, he will submit his proposal to Secretary Morgenthau, with the backing of a number of congressmen interested not only in silver but also in trade and finance.

This was the new plan, as Dies outlined it yesterday:

"Let the Treasury suspend for six months or a year its present policy of buying silver on the world market from anybody. And then let it substitute the policy of buying silver only from nations which agree to buy some of our surplus agricultural commodities.

Sees Cotton Disposal.

"For example, look at Germany. Germany wants to buy cotton from us. We've got 6,000,000 bales of cotton, valued at 12 cents a pound, stored in warehouses. Nobody can deny that the uncertainty about what will happen to that cotton is depressive to the market.

"All right. For purposes of argument, say silver is bringing 90 cents an ounce on the world market. We tell Germany that if she will sell silver to us, we'll give her $1 an ounce. We buy 50,000,000 ounces from her on that basis. But we have it understood that in return for the 10 per cent premium, Germany will buy $50,000,000 worth of our cotton.

Exports Going Down.

"I don't hesitate to make the prediction that if we put such a system into operation we would dispose of 4,000,000 bales of that stored 6,000,000 bales of cotton within six months.

"Our exports are going down and down and down. Despite our farm program, and because the export markets are disappearing, our surpluses are stacking up.

"So why not accomplish the double purpose of increasing our exports and at the same time buying the silver we're committed to buy? It certainly wouldn't hurt anything, and even the most skeptical of the skeptics must admit it might do some good."

Decision Simply Upheld the Constitution, He Declares.

"'The legislative power is hereby vested in the Congress of the United States and in the different executive departments which may be created from time to time.'

"That is brief, but I believe it will accomplish all those seem to desire who are dissatisfied with our present Constitutoin."

Borah referred to the Roosevelt statements, made when the President was Governor of New York, in discussing the decision of the court concerning interstate commerce.

"When Governor of the State of New York," he said, "our President declared that the great strength of our Government was due to the basic fact that we had 48 laboratories in which the people could acquaint themselves with and work out their policies—that this responsibility was indispensable to a self-governing people."

Borah quoted the President as having said that preservation of home rule by States is a "fundamental necessity." He quoted him further as saying that home rule is "a most vital thing if we are to continue along the course on which we have so far progressed with such unprecedented success."

"Constitution Attacked."

"The integrity of the State," Borah continued, "so ably outlined and defended by the man who was soon to become our President and to be entrusted with the duty of preserving our free institutions is the same doctrine embodied in the court, now so sadly misunderstood or unjustly denounced."

Borah added that the attack is really upon the Constitution itself and can be remedied only through constitutional amendment.

"If the people," he said, "wish to wipe out State lines and consolidate the Union into one unbroken empire, they have the power under the Constitution to do so. No one else has."

Sees Relief to Millions.

"The President will hardly be able to realize," he said, "the relief that this will bring to those persons and to millions more who have stood in fear of violating some rule or regulation of which they had no knowledge or of receiving letters threatening them for doing something which seemed of right to an American citizen."

Borah said he did not "wish to be understood as contending that the Constitution is a sacred document never to undergo amendment. Neither do I wish it to be inferred that the decisions of the Supreme Court are above the consideration and criticism of the people. But I do wish to be understood as contending that the great underlying principles of the American Constitution are indispensible to the republican form of Government—that to strike at those underlying principles is to strike at the life of a representative democracy."

Borah concluded with the statement that "the country need not doubt that the constitutional authority is sficient to meet the emergency at hand."

Ministers Meet Today.

Boonsboro, Md., June 2 (AP).—The Washington County Ministerial Association will meet tomorrow at the Crystal Grottoes Park near here. The meeting will be presided over by the Rev. Addison H. Groff, vice president of the association. Prof. A. C. Wertsel, of the Quincy U. B. Orphanage and Home, will be the principal speaker.

The Text of Senator Borah's Address Defending the NRA Decision

Following is the text of the radio talk made last night by Senator Borah in defense of the NRA decision of the Supreme Court:

We live under a written Constitution. Many people believe that is our good fortune. Some people seem to think otherwise. But, fortunate or unfortunate, it is a fact. This fact is the cause of much debate at the present time.

The constitution of Italy is the fertile and restless brain of Mussolini. The constitution of Germany is the daring and resourceful character of Hitler. The constitution of Russia is the iron will of Stalin. The Constitution of the United States is the will and purpose of the American people crystallized into a written document binding upon rulers and people alike.

The characteristics of the former constitutions is the restraint and repression they place upon the people and the latitude of power they allow to the rulers. The crowning virtue of the latter Constitution is the restraint and the control it imposes upon the agents and the representatives of, and the liberty it allows to the people. Under the former constitutions, the people are subjects. Under the latter Constitution, they are masters. The former constitutions are often referred to as "modern" and "progressive." The latter as "ancient" and "outmoded."

Modern forces—political and economic—are chafing under the restraint of our Constitution. It may be that it is destined to go. That would not be so strange. It is 146 years old; the oldest constitution in the world. But, if it should go—either by absolute rejection or by a transformation which would leave little of its former spirit and purpose—still it would have served the cause of human freedom and the advancement and the enlargement of human happiness as has no other document in the history of the world. Under it the average citizen emerged from a state of serfdom to that of a sovereign. Greater progress and more universal happiness has been the portion of the masses since the year 1789 than in all the 5,000 years preceding it.

Says the Past Is Secure.

Whatever, therefore, may be the future of the American Consitution "the past is secure." The "ox-cart" system may pass out, under the demand of a different civilization and of greater leaders. The political philosophy of Gen. Johnson, Mr. Richberg, and Dr. Tugwell may supplant the political philosophy of Gen. Washington, Madison, and Jefferson, nevertheless in my judgment the "ox-cart" should and will hold a high place at the bar of history. It has nobly served and marvelously wrought during the "ox-cart" period.

The only thing I shall urge is that in the matter of the change the people be consulted. The Constitution should not be changed by the Supreme Court. It should not be changed in Washington. It should be changed by the people alone.

The decision of the Supreme Court—wherein national recovery legislation was involved—has renewed interest in our constitutional form of government.

The court decided three main questions. First, that the Supreme Court in rendering its opinions is bound by the written terms of the Constitution. Second, that Congress alone under the Constitution as it now stands possesses the legislative power of the national Government. Third, that the States alone may legislate touching matters wholly within the State.

Those who criticize the court seem to contend that the court under certain circumstances ought not to be bound by the terms of the Constitution. Second, that the Executive departments should be permitted to exercise legislative power. And, third, that the Federal Government should be permitted to regulate and control the purely internal affairs of the State.

During recent years there has grown up a theory wholly at war with American principles of Constitutional Government, and that theory is, when an emergency exists, or when the Congress and the President declare an emergency to exist, this in some way enlarges the power of the Congress and the Executive under the Constitution. It is further contended that the courts are justified under such circumstances to consider matters other than the terms of the Constitution itself. This theory was urged in this case, but the court held uanimously that it was bound by the terms of the Constitution. It declared, in effect, that it would sustain in the fullest measure all powers which the people had written into the Constitution, but the court declared that it did not feel justified in wholly disregarding the language of the Constitution. A decision of the court based upon the theory that the court could consider anything other than the terms of the Constitution itself would create a complete judicial oligarchy. It would leave the question of the extent of power to the determination of those exercising power—a complete definition of despotic power.

No New Doctrine.

In rejecting the doctrine that an emergency justifies a disregard of the plain terms of the Constitution, the Supreme Court announced no new doctrine. Sixty-nine years ago a man, a civilian, was tried by military court and sentenced to death. He appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming he was entitled to be tried by a jury. The argument was made that the great Civil War was an emergency of such a nature that the court would be justified in disregarding the provisions of the Constitution, which guarantees the right of trial by jury. The court rejected this vicious doctrine, saying: "No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions (the Constitution) can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of the Government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism."

If any such power is to be given the court or to the Congress or to the Executive let those who urge that such powers b egiven come forward with a proposal in the way of an amendment to the Constitution. A change of this stupendous moment should not be made by the court through strained and unnatural construction or by the Congress through disregard of its constitutional obligation.

The second proposition which the court decided was that Congress, elected by the people, alone may make laws for the people. This is an old theory. It cost the friends of liberty a vast amount of suffering and bloodshed in order to establish it. At least, two great wars were fought upon the subject. The court held that under the Constitution, as it now stands, Congress could not abrogate its power and surrender to the Executive its power to make laws.

The court did say, however, and in so saying held—it seems to me to the full limit—that if Congress would provide in the law a standard, a guide or a rule governing the Executive in making rules and regulations which would have the force of law, that such rules and regulations thus made would be valid. The criticism of the court, however, implies that the power to make such rules and regulations having the force of law should be unrestrained and unlimited. This the court declared it was not authorized to approve under the Constitution.

5,000 Laws Promulgated.

Under the riotous power given the Executive in the national recovery act to make rules and regulations with the force of law marvelous things have happened. Over 5,000 laws have been promulgated by the Executive departments, the violation of which would constitute crimes. Over 17,000 rules and regulations have been promulgated the violation of which might not constitute a crime but which regulated and controlled personal conduct. These rules and regulations, or laws are to be found in some 10,000 pages of printed material. The cost of administering these laws has been, it is estimated, at over $41,000,000—all of which must be paid by the people.

Men have been charged with the violation of laws of which they had no knowledge and could not—as a practical matter—secure knowledge concerning them. The court declared that this was carrying the matter too far; that such information ought to be provided in the law passed by Congress which would, at least, indicate to the citizen the limit of authority on the part of the Executive department. It held that the Congress must, at least, specify rules and standards by which the Executive departments were to be guided, limited and controlled. The criticism of the decision means nothing less than that the law-making departments should include the Executive department. If the people of this country want the Executive departments to have unlimited power to make laws for every conceivable activity of the citizen, violation of which would send a man to jail, they at least should have an opportunity to pass upon the question. No such power should be established by the courts or by the surrender of duty by the Congress. Let us have an open proposal by way of a constitutional amendment submitted by those who want such power.

I undertook to frame an amendment. I wanted to get a full view of its hideous legal and moral aspect. My draft reads as follows:

"The legislative power is hereby vested in the Congress of the United States and in the different executive departments which may be created from time to time."

That is brief, but I believe it will accomplish all those seem to desire who are dissatisfied with our present Constitution.

I would not want it to be inferred from anything I say that this effort of the executive departments to take over the law-making power is of entirely recent growth, or that it is characteristic of any particular administration. It is an evil of long standing. It is one of the subtle and dangerous demands of bureaucracy made under the guise of efficiency and public interest which nothing less than eternal vigilance can restrain and, apparently, no power can wholly prevent.

Third Proposition.

For myself, I am not at all annoyed that this tyrannical practice has boldly intruded itself upon the public attention by its startling demand that it shall enjoy this privilege unrestrained. Under loose and vague rules and standards set up by Congress authority has been given from time to time to make rules and regulations having the force of law, until today the people are subjected to a species of annoyance that is almost unbearable. The Congress and the courts had already gone to the limit and—to some of us it seemed—beyond the limit in acquiescing in this practice. It was only when the demand was made that this power be practically unlimited that the court called a halt and in the language of Hamlet to the ghost as it led him toward the precipice said, thus far and nor farther.

The third proposition decided by the court was that Congress, the Federal Government, could not regulate or control the purely internal affairs of the State—that the Constitution had left to the State the right and power to regulate its local concerns. The court said, in substance and in effect, that however expedient it may be deemed for the Federal Government to invade the State and take over its affairs, the Constitution has given no such power and we feel bound by the terms of the Constitution.

When Governor of the State of New York, our President declared that the great strength of our Government was due to the basic fact that we had 48 laboratories in which the people could acquaint themselves with and work out their policies—that this responsibility was indispensable to a self-governing pople.

Upon another occasion the Governor of New York, now our President, addressing the Nation over the radio said, "The preservation of this home rule by the States is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country. * * * To bring about government by oligarchy masquerading as democracy it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our national government, the individual sovereignty of our States must first be destroyed. * * * We are safe from the danger of any such departure from the principles upon which this country was founded just so long as the individual home rule of the States is scrupulously preserved and fought for whenever they seem in danger. Thus it will be seen that this home rule is a most important thing—a most vital thing if we are to continue along the course on which we have progressed with such unprecedented success."

The integrity of the State, so ably outlined and defended by the man who was soon to become our President and to be entrusted with the duty of preserving our free institutions is the same doctrine embodied in the recent decisions of the Supreme Court, now so sadly misunderstood or so unjustly denounced. I am glad to join with the President in saying that there is no such thing as a Federal union after the States have been whipped and bullied into cowardly submission. I go further and say that so long as the Supreme Court rigidly preserves the rights of the States under the Constitution, it will deserve, and I venture to believe, it will have the respect and the support of the people of this country, and, upon reflection, the commendation of the highest of our officials.

Rights of the People.

Nothing should blind us to the fact, no emergency should confuse us to the great truth that the rights of the States are peculiarly the rights of the people and touch their habits and customs and daily way of living as nothing else may. It is important when one department of government invades the jurisdiction of another department of government, but that is comparatively unimportant with the invasion of the rights of the people in their every-day living. If any change is contemplated in this respect the first to be consulted should be the people themselves and that can only be brought about through an open proposal for an amendmend to the Constitution. The people know what, if any, portion of their local rights they are safe in surrendering better, far better than the courts or the Congress or the executive departments can possibly know.

There is an instinct in regard to such matters more to be trusted than the wisdom of rulers. The court should be commended for jealously guarding such rights. The law makers should resolve all doubts in favor of such rights and when it is proposed to curtail them it should be done only through the approval of the voters. If the people wish to wipe out State lines and consolidate the Union into one unbroken empire they have the power under the Constitution to do so. No one else has. Those who feel, therefore, that the States should be shorn of their power in whole or in part owe it to the people to submit their proposals to the people in the way of a definite amendment. That is the American way to meet this issue. The assailment of the court is wholly without justification in this particular instance. The court could not have decided otherwise under the Constitution. The attack is really upon the Constitution itself and that can only be remedied through a constitutional amendment.

One can sympathize with the President, with his almost dread responsibility in dealing with this great emergency. Abraham Lincoln, the truest child of democracy ever born under the American flag, it will be recalled in a special message to Congress put the query whether the power necessary to save the Republic might not be of such nature as to destroy the Republic. With great responsibility in a great emergency must necessarily come impatience with opposition in the effort to meet that responsibility. But what can be said in justification of the chirping satellites who hope to win favor and make sure of their salaries by decrying the handiwork of Washington, Jefferson and Madison, who because they have not the patience or the ability to frame a statute within the terms of the Constitution seek to cover their failure by talking loud and constantly about an outmoded Constitution and inadequate institutions.

Cites End of Suits.

I see in the morning paper that the President has ordered to be dismissed some 500 cases pending against persons for supposed offenses under the rules and regulations of the codes. It was fine to have acted promptly in this matter. The President will hardly be able to realize the relief that this will bring to those persons and to millions more who have stood in fear of violating some rule or regulation of which they had no knowledge or of receiving letters threatening them for doing something which seemed of right to an American citizen. These are the things, this everlasting fear and mortal dread of the truly law-abiding American citizen, which would have brought the national recovery act to ruin sooner or later had the court not spoken. It is useless now to go into details, but the record is at hand and the annoyances which have been unnecessarily visited upon millions of American citizens were working to the utter breakdown of the law.

Before we fully make up our minds, therefore, to govern permanently 130,000,000 people from Washington in all their local affairs of daily life from the farmer's wife marketing her chickens to the discretion of the husbandman in his planting and sowing, let us bear in mind that these things can not be done, can not even be overseen by the President. It is not humanly possible. These things are done by thousands of bureaucratic ascaridaes who glory in the display of arbitrary power. Let us bear in mind that in the prolific mucous of delegated power are laid and hatched these ravenous insects as fatal to the liberty of the citizen as the locusts to the field of the toiler. I rejoice that the President is putting an end to these activities and is giving rein to the initiative, the personal aims and ambitions, the judgment of the citizen touching his own personal affairs. The value of this in the matter of recovery can not be overestimated.

In conclusion, I do not wish to be understood as contending that the Constitution is a sacred document never to undergo amendment. Neither do I wish it to be inferred that the decisions of the Supreme Court are above the consideration and criticism of the people. But I do wish to be understood as contending that the great underlying principles of the American Constitution are indispensable to a republican form of government—that to strike at those underlying principles is to strike at the life of a representative democracy.

I do not forget either in these days that hardly had the Constitution been adopted before there were those who declared it unworkable, inadequate, and a failure. There has never been a time of stress in our history when there were not those who were fully prepared and anxious to write a much better Constitution and give us a more progressive form of government. But, in spite of doubts and fears and against all emergencies and in spite of the efforts of impatient critics the work of the combined views of Hamilton and Jefferson lived on. Under it the Nation has grown in strength and grandeur. The people have advanced in all things which contribute to responsible citizenship. It has successfully encountered the devastating forces of two great wars and effectively met the exigencies of more than one depression. It has accomplished these things not only because of its inherent worth, but also because in a large measure of the respect for and faith in the Constitution upon the part of the people, a thing which should at no time be underestimated.

We all appreciate the serious task devolving upon the general government at this time, but the constitutional powers which have been sufficient to deal with the great emergencies of the past we still enjoy unimpaired. The decision of the Supreme Court curtails them in no respect. These powers of the National Government under the Consfitution, are very great—they were designed to be and are equal to all the demands of a powerful Nation in distress if faithfully and patiently employed. They seem to be ample now as they have been at all times to sweep away all obstacles which stand in the way of their constitutional exercise. The power to regulate and control interstate commerce is full and complete. It may be that greater care and more patient consideration of measures are required. But the country need not doubt, it seems to me, that the constitutional authority is sufficient to meet the emergency at hand.

Labor Leaders Called to Plan Wage Cut Fight

the A. F. of L. indicate that employers already are increasing hours, reducing wages, and "resorting to the old policy of survival of the fittest as practiced before the inauguration of the New Deal." He said the miners have been forced to call a Nation-wide strike "as a matter of sheer economic and social protection."

"The needle trades, textile and other industries susceptible to sweatshop conditions will, unless labor can prevent it, sink back to the basis which these industries occupied before the enactment of NRA.

"The economic and social wreckage caused by the decision of the Supreme Court will be apparent on every hand. Small businessmen and labor will suffer very greatly."

Green placed little confidence in proposals for voluntary observation of codes.

Urges United Fight.

"The appeal of representatives of the chamber of commerce and the manufacturers' association, financial and special interests, to maintain wages, will carry no weight," he said. "The greatest opposition to the national recovery act came from these groups. They denounced the act and the President of the United States most viciously only a short time ago.

"The American Federation of Labor is advising the officers and members of all affiliated organizations to resist to the utmost all attempts to lower wages and living standards. Deprived of the benefits of the national recovery act and its steadying and stabilizing influence, they must now resort to the use of their economic strength. They will be encouraged and supported in the use of this economic strength as a protecting force against oppression, exploitation and reduced living standards."

Green said that labor will press for enactment of the Wagner labor disputes bill, the Guffey coal bill, the 30-hour-week bill and social security legislation. High on the list of subjects to be considered by labor Green placed the question of whether the Supreme Court has power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Holds People Benefited.

In his statement discussing President Roosevelt's attitude toward the decision, Shouse declared that "those who wish to change our basic political, economic and social organization should seek to do so by the honest and above-board method of amending the Constitution."

Shouse said the NRA bill was sent to Congress with "orders" to pass it and that gag rule was enforced when it was taken up by the House.

"Members of Congress must bear the responsibility of having voted for a flagrantly unconstitutional piece of legislation, but the executive agents who wrote it can not escape the major blame," he said.

"There are those who by implication attempt to convey the impression that the Supreme Court has done a terrible thing in rendering this decision. For whose benefit was it given. Why, for the great mass of the American people. The Constitution was written for their protection. Without it they would be subject to oppression and exploitation. Under it their condition has grown steadily better.

Sees Only Temporary Gains.

"Temporary advantages undoubtedly came to some through the NRA. But no lasting benefit can accrue to a free people from a law which gives government the power of oppression and deprives the individual of his clearly established rights."

Shouse said there can be no doubt that the decision will be followed by inconvenience "during the necessary period of readjustment to constitutional government."

"Such inconvenience constitutes the price we must pay for the re-establishment of fundamental principles," he said.

Secretary Perkins has invited Northeastern States to discuss at a meeting here tomorrow some method of arriving at interstate compacts to save some of NRA's industrial standards.

Discussing the same idea, John Dickinson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, said in a speech:

"The only conceivable method of attempting through the States to work out governmental regulations designed to influence our economic processes would be by a Nation-wide system of pacts to which all 48 States would become parties. Clearly such a system of pacts would place limitations upon State action in the same way that Federal legislation would do."

Norris Attacks Court Power.

Senator Norris, in an interview with the Associated Press, said that power of the Supreme Court to declare laws unconstitutional has resulted in "a Government by injunction."

"This is the only civilized country in the world," he said, "in which a law passed by the parliament and approved by the executive can be overruled by a supreme court.

"I am not criticizing the court in any of the decisions it has made, but it does illustrate that we are a government by injunction."

Norris said that next to an amendment to remove the power to declare laws unconstitutional he would prefer one requiring a four-fifths majority of the Supreme Court to rule a law unconstitutional.

Assurance of maintenance of standards set up by NRA continued to come from various business groups. The Distillers Institute, at a general meeting of representatives of the industry, adopted a resolution pledging continuance of wage and hour provisions and fair trade practices, including honest advertising and informative labeling.

Committee to Rule On Seating of Holt

Issue Limited to Question of Constitution Wording.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Elections Committee Saturday limited consideration of the contest over the seating of 29-year-old Senator-elect Rush Holt (Democrat), West Virginia, to one question—whether, under the Constitution, a person elected to the Senate must meet the age requirement at the start of the term for which he was eleced.

The contest was brought by former Senator Hatfield, a Republican, whom Holt defeated. Holt will be 30, the constitutional age for Senators, on June 19.

Farm House Where Kidnaped Boy Found Aid

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Suspects in Car Elude Law Net In Kidnap Hunt

Slip Away in Oregon Area; Mystery Plane Linked to Tacoma Case.

automobile was headed southward into as wild and rugged a type of country as there is in Oregon. Although main highways are few in that region, there are innumerable side roads and trails.

There would have been adequate opportunity, too, for the kidnapers to have escaped by plane should they have made that arrangement and planned a rendezvous in the desert country. Shortly after midnight a plane, not on regular schedule and yet unidentified, passed over Pendleton from the northwest.

The Diamond plane, it was said, had been used for smuggling narcotics and Orientals into the United States and finally had been brought up here from the Los Angeles area.

Although every automobile in Washington and Oregon was potentially under suspicion as the hundreds of State, city and county officers spread their nets for the fleeing kidnapers, possibly members of the Alvin Karpis gang, the main hunt centered in the badlands around Pendleton.

The mysterious tan sedan first appeared some 12 hours after the J. P. Weyerhaeuser family had paid the $200,000 near Issaquah, 25 miles from Tacoma, for the release of little George.

Duff Gurdane, a rancher, saw the car near Umatilla yesterday and reported it was going "like a bat out of hell."

Gurdane is a half-brother of Tom Gurdane, Umatilla County sheriff who helped capture William Edward Hickman, kidnap slayer of Marion Parker, in Los Angeles eight years ago.

Hickman, like many other criminals who sought concealment in the wilds of Northeastern Oregon, surrendered with his hands in the air after Gurdane and Buck Lieuellen, another officer, overtook him in a high speed contest.

Auto Trap Fails.

For a time last night, the auto was believed bottled up in a 45-mile area of northern Umatilla County, but no further trace of it was located in a night-long search.

Department of Justice agents in Tacoma, where 9-year-old George was returned yesterday after payment of the ransom, would not comment on the Oregon manhunt.

They received with interest, however, reports of the search as the car was sighted in apparently desperate efforts to evade the spreading army of officers.

The ace marksmen chasing the car planned to question every one who reported seeing it.

Descriptions of men wanted in connection with the kidnaping were broadcast from Department of Justice headquarters at Los Angeles today in the first definite indication the search has spread into California.

The broadcast, described by the Department of Justice as "purely a precautionary measure" should the suspects flee south, was sent over a State-wide police communication system.

Description of Trio.

Federal agents here said they "did not know" if the suspects were members of the notorious Karpis gang.

"Suspects probably using a Buick sedan, gray color, with a trunk on back, or a tan Hudson sedan. Numbers of license plates are unknown," said the message.

The men were described as follows:

"No. 1. Possibly a Greek or Macedonian, male, 35 or 40, 5 feet 11 inches or 6 feet, 165 pounds; hair, eyebrows and complexion dark. Slender build, smooth-shaven, noticeable lines about mouth. Wore gray felt hat and gray suit.

"No. 2. Possibly an American, male, 39, 5 feet 10 inches, 200 pounds, heavy build, slightly prominent stomach; dark hair; medium complexion, no description of clothing.

"No. 3. Possibly an American, male, about 40, 5 feet 9 inches or 5 feet 10 inches, 160 pounds; Brown hair, dark complexion, may be wearing small, close-cropped moustache; probably wearing a brown checked suit."

The grim-faced army of official searchers had many clews and an endless stream of reports on which to work as they sought the snatchers.

First was the statement of the young victim that six men belonged to the gang which seized him May 24 as he walked homeward at noon from his school.

Three of the men called each other "Harry, Bill and Alvin—who must be that fellow Karpis," George said, adding his own belief to a widespread unofficial feeling that the notorious Midwest kidnap gang was involved.

Ransom Bills Checked.

A second important fact on which the Justice Department agents were known to be working was the $200,000 ransom fund, a huge stack of Federal Reserve currency in $20, $10 and $5 bills.

It was known that Federal operatives have prepared a list of the serial numbers on these bills, a job which kept a large staff at work in the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the Government's crime fighters.

Then there was the ransom note received by George's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Weyerhaeuser, jr., of the wealthy Tacoma and St. Paul lumber family. It was a typewritten message setting forth the gang's demand for $200,000 and outlining procedure for the family to follow in announcing its readiness to pay the money.

Numerous Tacoma residents came forward with statements they had seen a man resembling Volney Davis, lieutenant of the Karpis gang, there a week ago.

Justice Department agents clamped silence over all their activities and it could not be learned whether they gave credence to the reports.

LOUIS SPIERS, woodcutter, who lives near Issaquah, chased George away from his house when the boy sought aid. The boy later found shelter at Bonifas farm.

Agents Hop Off With Captive; Thought Davis

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 2.—Seven men believed to be Federal agents tonight bundled another man into an airplane at the Chicago Municipal Airport and the ship immediately took off for an unannounced destination. The men brusquely declined comment on reports their prisoner was Volney Davis, hunted in the Edward G. Bremer and George Weyerhaeuser kidnapings.

The prisoner, manacled to wto burly guards and surrounded by five others, was pushed aboard a chartered ship in one corner of the field. It was a tri-motored Stinson.

Less than an hour earlier, a squad of agents slipped out of the local Department of Justice here, refusing to say where they were going. They were followed by Melvin Purvis, agent in charge, who smiled at questioners and remarked he was "going out for some air."

At the airport, the loading of the prisoner was carried out with dispatch. A bystander, who would not tell his name, said the handcuffed man was Davis, former lieutenant to Alvin Karpis and a fugitive murderer from Oklahoma City.

Landlord Slain In Hagerstown; Roomers Held

chanan had been occupying regularly, while Mongan was taken into custody when he attempted to pawn a meat saw, which police say was identified as having belonged to Buchanan.

Robbery apparently was the motive, according to police, who found only 5 cents in the trousers Buchanan was wearing.

The murder was discovered when two boarders at the house had gone to Buchanan's bedroom, which he also used as an office, to pay a bill. Instead of finding Buchanan there, they found Riggs. They saw three dark streams of what appeared to be blood flowing from beneath the locked door of an adjoining room. After rapping on the door and receiving no response they summoned police, who gained admittance with the aid of a skeleton key.

Lying on the floor beside the bed was Buchanan's body, his left arm lifted above his head as if attempting to ward off a blow. Clutched in his left hand was his unopened knife, which police believe he grasped as his assailant approached.

Location of Body Puzzles.

Boarders at the rooming house, as well as members of his family, said they could not explain Buchanan's presence in the room where the body was found—that he had always been accustomed to spend most of his time, including his sleeping hours in the small bedroom where Riggs was found in bed.

Members of his family said Buchanan always carried a roll of bills, usually several hundred dollars, that they knew he had money in his pocket when last seen alive last night, because one of the boarders had paid for lodging.

Nor could police find the ledger in which he kept his accounts, nor keys he usually carried.

A man of likeable nature, police could find no one who knew of any enemies he might have.

Operated Furnishing Store.

Buchanan was born at Cearfoss, Washington County, and came to Hagerstown in his youth. With a relative, George W. Rohrer, he operated a men's furnishing store and also a grocery on the first floor of the building where his body was found. For 30 years the firm of Buchanan & Rohrer operated at that stand. Sixteen years ago Buchanan retired from business. But ten years ago he decided to operate the rooming house.

Buchanan was an active church worker in his younger days. He was one of the organizers of the Men's Bible Class of St. Paul's United Brethren Church, a former trustee of the church and a member of the official board of that church. He was a member of Friendship Lodge of Masons of Hagerstown.

The widow, Mrs. Nettie L. Buchanan; two children, William and Mrs. Edwin Maugans, both of Hagerstown, and a brother, D. M. Buchanan, and sister, Mrs. J. C. Yessler, all of Hagerstown, survive.

John Gilbert Free Fourth Time As Virginia Bruce Wins Divorce

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, June 2.—John Gilbert, film actor, for the fourth time was free of marital ties today.

Virginia Bruce, screen actress, court records showed, has just obtained her final decree of divorce. She charged cruelty.

Superior Judge Dudley S. Valentine approved a property settlement giving her $92.31 a week alimony for three years and $150 a month for the support of her daughter, Susan Ann Gilbert, now 21 months old, until she reaches her majority. Gilbert has paid these obligations in a sum of $42,500, the decree showed.

Gilbert and Miss Bruce were married August 10, 1932. Shortly after their separation, a little more than a year ago, the actress returned to film work, and has been featured in a number of productions. Gilbert, a star of the silent days, has appeared in only a few motion pictures since the advent of the talkies. Miss Bruce recently said she believed her marriage and divorce would aid her on her way to stardom.

In 1929 Gilbert and Ina Claire, stage and screen actress, eloped by airplane to Las Vegas, Nev. A rift came after a little more than a year, however, and they were divorced in 1931.

His second wife was Leatrice Joy, early film star. They were married in 1923, and were divorced two years later. She has since married again.

Gilbert's first wife was Olivia Burwell, not in the theatrical profession. They were married in 1922 and were divorced the same year.

Hunter Tracks Down Sheep-Killing Bear

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Priest Cautions Class of Girls About Pitfalls

Father Hanrahan Exhorts St. Joseph's Graduates at Emmitsburg.

By the Associated Press.

Emmitsburg, Md., June 2.—Warning the graduating class of St. Joseph's College against a "veritable avalanche" of demoralization in the world today, the Rev. James P. Hanrahan of Albany, N. Y., asserted in a baccalaureate sermon today that the Catholic Church "has been divinely authorized * * * to safeguard truth and righteousness."

The "lofty doctrine" of the church, the Rev. Mr. Hanrahan said, will be met with "naught but ridicule" by the "votaries of current thought and practice" and the "foremost aim and intent of present-day life is seemingly to drag souls downward * * * and to besmirch and blacken them in sin."

Writing Called Depraved.

"You must know to what a base, depraved ebb contemporary writing has carried itself," he told the 33 women of the class. "You have surely been strongly admonished to avoid the tragic pitfalls which are the almost inevitable outcome of indiscriminate reading in this heyday of sensualism and scoffing. * * *

"You are aware, too, of the perverted paths which the screen and theater have found in the discharge of their pristine mission of elevating and ennobling mankind."

The tRev. Mr. Hanrahan asserted the "saddest" of the "drastic transformations in this ero of new morality" has been the "forsaking by womanhood of the niche of-loveliness sculptured for it by the hand of God."

Dress Habits Offending.

"Its successive rejections of convention," he continued, "the facility it cultivated for academic distinctions as between propriety and sin might have been recognized as clear forebodings of the shocking excesses in dress and behavior which have become so widely prevalent."

As the mission of the graduating class, he said reclamation of humanity from skepticism and unbelief and unholy self-gratification which run rampant through the civilization of our days should be the "stupendous assignment" the members undertake.

Cheap Housing Held Solution To Depression

Owen Young Sounds Keynote at Homes Parley of Purdue University.

By the United Press.

Lafayette, Ind., June 2.—Development of low cost home construction as a new industry carries the solution to economic recovery, Owen D. Young, New York financier, said yesterday at the final annual Purdue University national homes conference.

Young sounded the keynote of the meeting called to co-relate discoveries of science with efforts of the building industry to revive economic stability and revise the housing standards of the Nation.

Nearly 200 leaders in all types of building material companies attended the conference and heard plans of the Purdue research foundation for a 143-acre better homes "test tube."

Laboratory experiments, testing all types of home construction and materials, with their reaction to all the climatic conditions in the nation, will be conducted at a 143-acre tract adjoining the Purdue campus.

Young lauded the program and urged building trade leaders to unite behind the project.

"The trouble with the housing industry today is that we are building homes out of reach of the average man," he said.

"We need a new industry to absorb unemployment in the building trades and the time to develop the science of better living is especially fit now."

Young was named member of a committee to act in an advisory capacity to the research foundation experiments.

M. C. Honeywell, Minneapolis, president of the Minneapolis-Honeywell company, was named chairman, and Tyler S. Rogers, New York, secretary.

Hope For The U. Of M.

The decision of the board of regents to investigate fully the University of Maryland should be welcomed by all who have an interest in this neighboring institution of higher education. Scholarship is predicated on serenity, a condition impossible when a university is racked by angry interdepartmental antagonisms. Whatever anguish it may entail, the inquiry will be well worthwhile if it can locate and remove the source of the distemper which appears to be strangling this once flourishing institution.

Returns from a questionnaire circulated among the faculty persuade the board that at least some part of the charges of professors and students against the administration are valid. "All phases" of the university will, accordingly, be scrutinized. Just why Gov. Nice—speaking at commencement exercises at which he received an honorary degree—should have undertaken to eulogize the university at such a moment, in the very face of the regents' clearly implied admission of unsatisfactory conditions, is not readily understandable. He may well wish to call back his words of unqualified praise after the inquiry.

That the board will be completely fair is indicated by a statement issued along with the announcement of the investigation. In contradiction of those who criticize Dr. Pearson for the low salaries and meager budgets allowed, it is pointed out that such appropriations are determined by the board and not by the president alone. This impartiality presages a satisfactory solution of the College Park problems and the university may look forward with revived spirits to a return to the days when it ranked high among the leading educational institutions of the country.

Japan's Inconsistency.

Japan's latest threats against China coincide with the announcement of extensive American and British interests that they will withdraw from Manchukuo because they no longer have an opportunity to do business there. We have no means of determining whether this decision has been timed to emphasize most effectively the incongruities of Tokyo's policy in the Far East. But it certainly serves that purpose.

The Japanese military forces are not satisfied with the reaction in China to their aggressive tactics. And Foreign Minister Hirota is represented as being disappointed because his gestures of friendship have not been reciprocated. The Chinese, it seems, are not yet reconciled to the loss of Manchuria. Consequently, they are to be again punished by extension of the "neutral zone" to include Peiping, the ancient capital, and Tientsin, one of China's most important commercial centers.

Of course, the Japanese army has found an excuse for the proposed advance. China is accused of encouraging a terrorist group in Korea, of failing to control the anti-Japanese press, of refusal to cooperate in establishing joint radiophone and air services, of increasing her tariffs and maintaining hostile diplomats at Geneva. These very accusations betray an intolerable attitude of overlordship on the part of Japanese militarists. But they are carefully linked with a general charge of treaty violation, which is undoubtedly intended to condemn China in the eyes of Western nations.

Japan is particularly distressed at the continuation of the Chinese boycott. Presumably the ultimatum sent to Nanking revolves around this grievance. Col. Sakai, in charge of Japanese armed forces in North China, insists that the demands must be carried out to the letter either by the Chinese or by the Japanese army. In other words, China is told to live up to commercial treaty obligations forced upon her or risk further dismemberment at the hands of invading troops.

Over in Manchukuo the shoe is on the other foot. American and British interests are compelled to relinquish their business in the Japanese-sponsored state because of an economic boycott, in spite of the treaty guaranteeing maintenance of the "open door" in this territory.

The pressure against foreign concerns in Manchukuo is very subtle. They are not actually denied the right to conduct business. But their opportunities to function profitably are cut off. The withdrawal of American oil and banking firms all too plainly indicates that the open door is being closed unofficially, by much the same methods the Chinese use to exclude Japanese interests from their own country.

There is no disposition on the part of the United States or other interested countries to protect their business in Manchuria with bayonets and battleships. Japan would be extremely indignant if any official should suggest maintenance of the open door in Manchukuo by armed intervention. Yet that is in effect the policy which Japan is following in China.

Caillaux To The Rescue.

Confidence in the ability of France to weather her latest currency crisis without resort to devaluation has been greatly strengthened by the selection of Joseph Caillaux as finance minister in the Bouisson cabinet. If the Chamber of Deputies votes, as expected, to empower the new government to institute financial and economic reforms by decree, M. Caillaux will be given an opportunity to effect the drastic economies needed to balance the budget and save the franc. Such is his announced intention, and if he does not succeed, it will not be for lack of courage or imperfect understanding of the magnitude of the task that confronts him.

M. Caillaux's keen analytical mind, long political experience and demonstrated capacity to stand up against public abuse are qualities which admirably equip him to lead the fight for financial reform. He is on record as a foe of what he calls the "cult of a debased currency."

More than a decade ago in a book discussing the outlook for France and for Europe, M. Caillaux, referring to Germany's post-war prosperity, conceded that "a debased currency retains for a certain length of time a purchasing power greater than its value in the open market; wages in particular do not rise immediately in proportion to the fall of the currency." He added with prophetic force, however, that "there is little doubt about what is happening in Germany; that nation shows all the outward signs of prosperity and commercial success, but beneath the surface lie economic rocks toward which it seems to be headed."

Even if business men and exporters can not be persuaded to abandon advocacy of devaluation by the force of such warnings, the new finance minister will no doubt find firm allies in the thrifty French rentiers who constitute a large and influential body of citizens. The wage earners and salaried classes who have experienced the hardships of an inflationary rise of living costs, not offset by a corresponding increase in their own earnings, are likewise fearful of another cut in the gold value of the franc. On the other hand, the reduction in governmental outlays necessary to balance the budget, or at least to finance the deficit, will meet with stout resistance from a large and well organized body of civil servants and pensioners, as well as other groups affected by economy decrees.

In the long run the fate of the franc will be determined, no doubt, by the outcome of the struggle between these hostile interests. For the present, however, M. Caillaux's recorded hostility to the weak and inefficient fiscal policies which plunged France into disastrous inflation offers new encouragement. Eventually, the gold value of the franc may in any case be reduced by international agreement in order to correct its overvaluation in terms of other currencies. Devaluation following restoration of confidence in the government's financial policies, however, would not carry a threat of demoralizing inflation such as would inevitably be associated with a decision to devalue under the pressure of a flight from the currency.

Local Financing Problem.

If the District old-age pension and unemployment insurance bills are enacted into law at this session of Congress, Washington will probably be called upon to raise an additional $1,000,000 to defray its share of the cost of these measures during the coming fiscal year. It is just as well to have the financial aspects of the social security program thus brought to the attention of local taxpayers before action has been taken on the national measure now pending. Comparatively little thought has been given to the problem of costs by those interested in security legislation, while the opposition has been inclined to take an obstructionist attitude that precludes helpful suggestions.

The District taxpayers, however, have been given an opportunity to express their views on this subject before it is too late to amend the local bills with a view to better distribution of the burden of insurance payments. Thus, the District could be relieved of a considerable part of the estimated outlay required to cover its share of the unemployment insurance premiums, if insured workers were required to contribute to the fund.

Such contributions would lighten the pressure upon local taxpayers. Perhaps more important, it is both reasonable and socially desirable to require insured employes to share the costs. In that way, they would acquire a more direct interest in the intelligent and economical administration of the insurance fund, a sense of being copartners in an undertaking that vitally concerns them. Employe contributions are all but universal in Great Britain and other European countries that have successful systems of unemployment insurance. The arguments there applicable are just as compelling in our own case.

Before discussing the respective merits of local income and inheritance taxes, or increases in gasoline taxes as a means of raising needed additional revenues, consideration should also be given to the problems created by the lack of a definite fiscal arrangement between the District and the Federal Government.

So long as Congress follows the opportunistic policy of paring down Federal contributions without regard to any rule of equity, the imposition of new District taxes offers no assurance of budgetary balance in the future. When, as at present, there is a prospect that new recurrent additions to local expenditures will be voted, the need for a thorough study of the budgetary position becomes all the more imperative, before any action is taken on new tax bills.

A Challenge To Congress.

While a group of operators who favor the Guffey bituminous coal bill are working feverishly to revise that measure, hoping to make it constitutional in the light of the decision in the Schechter case, the United Mine Workers are making preparations for a general strike when present wage agreements expire June 16. The president of the union, John L. Lewis, says that the strike will be called off if the Guffey bill is enacted, thereby throwing down a challenge to Congress that should arouse just resentment.

Nobody with the slightest knowledge of conditions in the bituminous fields denies that the coal industry is badly in need of drastic treatment. But the remedy for irregular employment, inadequate earnings, mine shutdowns and all the economic afflictions that result from excess producing capacity does not lie in passage of a measure of more than dubious constitutionality and questionable economic value.

The mine workers and the industry have both suffered from attempts to raise wages and consequently prices within the industry to levels that the market could not support. Efforts to maintain coal prices under NRA code agreements have also proved abortive. And yet in face of these failures, the organized mine workers are demanding a reduction of working hours to 30 per week and asking for increases in daily rates of pay. Even if a rigid production and price control plan of the Guffey type were forced upon the industry, the resultant reduction in coal consumption through a shift to competitive fuels might leave the wage problem as acute as before.

Quite apart, however, from the numerous objections to the Guffey plan, Congress and the Administration need time to study the implications of the Schechter decision and make sure that any attempt to establish a new form of industrial organization for the coal industry will be not only economically feasible but constitutionally permissible. Attempts to force premature action on a question of such moment, affecting one of the country's most important natural resources, are unreasonable even from the viewpoint of organized labor.

Undoubtedly the coal industry is "affected with a public interest" and the country is concerned to secure a type of regulatory control that will eliminate the huge wastes of the present competitive system. But the problems that confront the industry can not be intelligently solved in an atmosphere of strife or at a time when the question of the constitutional limits of Federal regulatory authority has been sharply challenged.

Midsummer Day's Dream.

Congress, according to a prophetic newspaper notice, is looking "ahead" to a late summer session. Nothing, however, is said about Congress looking "forward" to any such prospect. Because in spite of air-conditioned chambers and offices, and the coolest of clothing, there is still plenty of leeway for dat ole debbil sun to get in his dirty work. Heated debates are literally, as well as figuratively, in order when the legislative bodies shimmer through July and August.

But if Senators and Representatives are disgruntled at being compelled to swelter through the particular brand of heat which seems peculiar to this city alone, District residents, at the risk of being considered unfeeling, are not far from rejoicing at the thought of a summer session. Whatever the cost, it will do something to relieve the tedium of the dog days. Local activity always seems to dwindle with the sine die announcement. A certain lackadaisical inertia then prevails in this city of half a million, which makes it strangely akin to the smallest of sun-baked country towns. Those who are not fortunate enough to be able to flee to mountains or beach simply suffer, though not always in silence, and sweat, if we may call a spade a spade.

Whoever wrote "only mad dogs and Englishmen go out in the noonday sun" obviously forgot Washingtonians. In view of the misery-loves-company truism, it is perhaps not unnatural, then, that the possibility of compelling 531 statesmen from the provinces to share our 100 degrees should create some malevolent glee throughout the city.

Scientists say the armadillo hasn't changed in millions of years. Such a pity it is, too, when any change would have been for the better.

"Let us seal your suit in a mothproof bag for the summer," suggests a dry cleaner. No, thanks. We sunburn easily.

A New Committee.

From the Houston Post.

The United States Senate traditionally is rather chary with committees. Unlike the Hooverian era, when committees and commissions came into full flower, the Senate has not appointed a new committee in many years. The other day it added a new one to the standing committees of the Senate.

This new committee will be known as the Committee on Air Commerce and Civil Aviation. From its name its scope is obvious. It is a move of wisdom and expediency.

The need for establishing such a committee has been long felt. Special consideration for legislation dealing with this increasingly important form of transportation is evident. Senators Adams, Byrd and Dickinson, sponsors of the committee, have perfected a commendable idea.

There is no reason, as time moves on, why the new committee should not become one of the outstanding committees of the Senate. Indeed, should lead to the establishment of a new portfolio in the President's Cabinet, that of Secretary of Aeronautics.

Lest We Forget!

During the temporary absence of Mr. Elderman, The Post's cartoonist, a symposium of editorial reaction to current national and foreign affairs will be published from day to day in this space. The reprinted drawings will not necessarily represent our own viewpoint, but are selected as reflections of considered opinions on the passing scene. The editors of The Post wish to make full acknowledgment of the courtesy of their contemporaries in granting permission for this procedure.

Letters To The Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

New Rules Needed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It appears at this time, 26 months after accepting the New Deal, that we failed to clear the way for it. The New Deal requires new methods and a new set of rules. As it stands today everything leads up to the courts of last resort to be found unworkable on the basis that "it can't be done because it never has been done."

If something is not done to open the way out of this blind alley, we will find ourselves coming back continually in the circle in which we have been milling around for some time. Nothing has been done toward reconstruction. We simply don't seem to grasp the idea that we must learn to live in this house we have built, and make our plans to that end, or allow it to be completely demolished and start over again.

We can live no longer on the low sordid basis which has been our stamping ground in the past. If our country can't produce men capable of living on a higher plane we will see the ship collapse beyond even the faintest hope of repair. If our American Christianity has made no deeper impression on the minds of its adherents than this displayed by our general practice that "everything is all right if you think it is" then we will not be able to find the men necessary to open the way for us, and Christianity has failed more signally than any other feature of our society.

"Bonus Veto Doomed."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The bonus message of President Roosevelt, in substance, lays down the doctrine that a former service person, not disabled or diseased through direct service causes, stands in no preferred position and is entitled to no benefits nor preferences at the hands of the Government. Though this diatribe may express the views of some of our people, it is not the American doctrine and never will be.

The doctrine that a former service person stands in a separate category and is entitled to reasonable benefits and preferences is older than Rome and Carthage and it has been the American doctrine from the earliest Colonial days. The parent country—England—has always followed this doctrine and all great modern nations follow it today. The only few countries to ignore the principle have neither safety abroad nor stability at home. Even Soviet Russia, while denying any duty to Czarist veterans, follows the doctrine with respect to its own service people.

The bonus message may fully express the feelings of our President, as an individual, but it does not accord with American principles and doctrines. Like many other strange doctrines of this strange Administration, it is doomed to be repudiated by our people.

Horse Sense Needed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It seems to me that it is about time that Congress, and not Roosevelt, Richberg, Johnson, Green and the "brain trust," make the laws again. Considering the miserable failure of these would-be lawmakers, Congress should get into harness without delay. What we need are the good old buggy days—with the good horse sense that went with them.

Even if Congress did not make the laws that got their well-deserved finish in the Supreme Court, Congress passed them, and Congress is really to blame.

Against Bus Service.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The work of destruction goes on apace and we are now informed that the next target for the hammer and ax so ably wielded by our worthy "People's Counsel," is the Chevy Chase street car line.

In lieu of a pleasant ride in clean air with the opportunity of reading our morning Post while so doing, we will soon be unwillingly treated to generous doses of motor exhaust fumes, while herded within the entrails of ambulating buses.

Granted, that this last named "cheap skate" method of "modern" transportation will undoubtedly save money for the company, principally by eliminating one platform man per vehicle, but why rob so many Peters to pay a few Pauls?

The high pressure bus salesmen in this territory have undoubtedly used a street sweeper's broom to spread their nauseating anti-street car propaganda. Certainly not a camel's-hair brush. E. S. M.

Fortunate Farmers?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Are these merry-making, joy-riding farmers, the farmers of the sob stories in which the mortgaged homes and unpaid taxes figured so prominently? If so, are we to assume that their worldly fortunes have so improved that they have freed their homes from the danger of foreclosure, etc.?

If they have been so much more fortunate than the majority of citizens, should not Mr. Roosevelt keep his word and pronounce the emergency over as far as they are concerned and so terminate unfair discrimination in their favor? If their homes still are mortgaged, interest unpaid and taxes unpaid doesn't it seem indecent for them to be using taxpayers' money for a jamboree?

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Thank you for your editorial of May 31 on "The Forgotten Employes."

Reactions To The NRA Decision.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter poultry case is exactly the sort of decision which any high school boy properly instructed in civics would have made on the basis of a strict interpretation of the Constitution of the United States. On the basis of such a construction, the decision was the only one possible. By the same token, however, it decides nothing permanently but the inability of the Supreme Court, as at present constituted, to take a realistic view of the meaning of the Constitution in its application to present-day problems.

Even the meaning of the words United States of America no longer corresponds with what was originally intended by the framers of the Constitution, as most careful students of constitutional history will admit. About three-quarters of a century ago, in fact, we fought a four years' war to give it that different meaning. It is all the more strange, therefore, that the present decision should seem to hark back to the idea of the sovereignty of individual States from which we have so long been progressively departing, especially in view of the proud record of that doctrine. It has successively been used to bolster slavery, to justify secession, to temporarily defeat or postpone regulation of railways, to obstruct public utility regulation, to prevent the passage of laws providing for minimum wages or specifying maximum hours of labor, and lastly, to defeat temporarily, but for the time being definitely and completely, any attempt to make effective the sort of social legislation required not only by the present emergency but necessary for the permanent promotion of "the common welfare," as provided in the Constitution itself.

There is scant reason to mourn for the death of the NRA itself, which was the major mistake of the present Administration, but the decision of the court indicates an attitude of mind which casts serious doubts on the possibility of really effective social legislation.

M. F. THURSTON.
Washington, May 31.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The recent decision of the Supreme Court in connection with the NRA can be turned into a channel that will lead to lasting benefits to our country.

The desire to save the code for hours for workers and minimum wages could be accomplished if we would forget government centralization and accomplish the same result with the various States. If the representatives of the various States were called together, and an effort made to have each State adopt code regulations as to hours and wages of the workers, it would seem that this could be accomplished. The people of all States have been well educated in the past two years as to the benefits arising from the labor code of the NRA. That education is fixed at present. The benefits derived from the fixing of wages and hours of employment are the real elements in the endeavors for prosperity.

In centralizing our Government, we have forgotten the 48 partners we have in the various States. Whether our Constitution was right or wrong in so arranging our system is immaterial. Had we taken those 48 partners into our national conferences from time to time and worked for a uniform method to be approved by each of those States, or partners, on subjects of national life, we probably would have avoided much of the evils that have come from centralized government, and trying to do nationally what should have been done jointly. This method would have preserved to the States their sovereign rights, and left unaffected the national rights, but would have established many reforms of a national effect by united action of each of the States acting together for the common good.

We have too long treated the States as silent partners in our national life, instead of active partners, who should be called into conferences from time to time to act in a uniform manner for the establishing of legislation that would affect the whole Nation. T. H. J.

The Post Impressionist

Their Humble Duties

Post Office, Monday.

THE document, it seems, was addressed to England's King. The signature was J. M. Barrie's—Peter Pan's author is the I. S. of A., P. and C's president:

"The members of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers present their humble duties to your Majesty and respectfully tender the felicitations of the world of British literature and music which they represent upon the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of your Majesty's accession to the Throne."

A breath-taker. But wait: "In loyal commemoration of this great event in the stirring story of our times the members of the Council of the Society, with your Majesty's gracious permisson, are presenting to the Royal Library, Windsor Castle, each member a copy of that one of his or her works which its author has selected for the honor of such inclusion, the whole uniformly bound to form one set, being, it is humbly hoped, a fitting record of the literary, dramatic and musical works of your Majesty's subjects today which may be privileged to be placed in the long roll of English letters beside the works of their predecessors on the shelves of the Royal Library."

Yes, did we ever descend to the obvious, we might say that that sentence was itself a "long roll of English letters." But doesn't the I. S. of A., P. and C. admit being, in effect, "the world of British literature"?

After all, the style is nicely fitted to the matter: the gift is breath-taking, too. King George must have hurried panting to those volumes.

Let's let the music go. It consists, chiefly, of "Twenty-One Songs" by Sir H. W. Davies.

What authors are represented? What works did they choose to represent them?

There are some books and authors in this catalogue about which we are not going to carp.

King George certainly ought to own Gilbert Murray's idea of "The Oresteia." Bernard Shaw was right in donating "St. Joan." Trevelyan's history, Housman's "Shropshire Lad." Dunsany's "Curse of the Wise Woman" belong on the shelves of a royal library.

We wouldn't bar Beresford's "Camberwell Miracle," either, or E. M. Foster's passage to that India whereof King George is Emperor. Among Mrs. Belloc Lowndes' creepy stories, "The Lodger" is one of the creepiest, and W. B. Maxwell's "Guarded Flame" guards one splendid moment. Perhaps Maugham is wise in considering his best book "Of Human Bondage." If "Many Cargoes" is the collection of W. W. Jacobs that contains "The Monkey's Paw," every soul at Windsor ought to read it.

But weren't Sir James Barrie, president, and Walter de la Mare a bit inclusive when the former chose his "Collected Plays", the latter his "Collected Poems"?

Sheila Kaye-Smith presented her monarch with "Gally-bird", not "The End of the House of Alard." A. A. Milne gave "Peace with Honor," not "When We Were Very Young," whereas Margaret Kennedy sent "A Long Time Ago" instead of "The Constant Nymph."

Here is Chesterton with his nosegay of verses—although, to be sure, it does hold his ballad about St. Barbara—rather than his jeweled essays or his crown for St. Francis of Assisi. Here is John Drinkwater with "Summer Harvest" rather than "Lincoln," Masefield with "Gallipoli" rather than "The Everlasting Mercy."

Does Eden Phillpotts really prefer "The Mother" to "The Human Boy"? Does Francis Brett Young honestly like his "Little World" better than his "Tragic Bride"? Did Granville Barker fix upon "His Majesty" because of its title or because he felt that his Majesty was not quite the sort of person to profit by "The Madras House"?

Who is Owen Rutter? Why is Wells so conspicuously absent? Did Kipling abstain because his "Widow of Windsor" kept him from being the laureate?

Why did Compton Mackenzie give "The Darkening Green?" Why did Hugh Walpole give anything at all?

In these days, there is not so much said as there once was concerning what is proper reading for the young. In these days, the old term "fit for a king" might be said to have acquired a somewhat sinister significance.

But this list does give us some hint of what the loyal world of British literature considers fit for a king and fit reading for a king. We refer to a certain diaphanous robe of romance which must not longer hide its blushing head among these "uniformly bound" volumes chosen by the members of the Incorporated Society of Authors, Playwrights and Composers as those of their works best planned to beguile the royal leisure.

The Confusion.

"WELL," says Pete, the taxi driver, "I run into some jungle competition yesterday, just like they said was going to happen if the NRA was not upheld. I went into my cigar store where I always buys cigarettes and I says give me a pack of cigarettes and they not only hands me the coffin-nails, but they give me two packages of matches with it. That's what they used to do, of course. But now when they again give me two packages of matches I knew I was in a new order or something.

"Under the old order I used to always get two packages of matches with every package of cigarettes. In fact, the way the clerks would toss the matches onto the counter I used to think matches didn't mean much of anything. I sho' didn't think they were part of the social order. But then came along the New Deal which eliminated the chaos from business and took away the jungle competition and the clerks, they would only hand me one package of matches. For the first couple of times I said, 'Why, don't you give me two packages of matches as you used to?' And they said because it's the New Deal and we gotta cut out the jungle competition.

"Well, they were sho' back in their jungle competition now. Because I says 'give me a package of cigarettes' and the clerk, he tossed out two packages of matches and says 'Here.' He didn't have to tell me. After all, I've got some sense. I can tell when these different orders pass, you know, one President he comes in and says it's a certain kind of order and another President, he comes in and says its another kind of order. Well, I figure Presidents got to get along just like me but they can't fool me. I can always tell when its one order or when its another order. And when that fellow handed me two packages of matches I says right then, Uh, uh, it's another order.

"When I went home that night I says to the little lady—that's what I frequently call here. Sometimes, I says the 'little missus' but the 'little missus' and the 'little lady'—they both mean the same. Anyways, I says to her: 'Well, we're back in jungle competition.' And she says—I'll declare, sometimes I think she don't know nothing about economics. She listens to Mrs. Roosevelt on the radio too. But I don't know—maybe, she's just sort of dumb. After all, the little missus, she don't go around and meet people like I do. You take me, I'm always meeting Congressmen. It's a funny thing about those Congressmen, too. They're supposed to be smart. On account of their making the laws you'd naturally think they must know something. But honestly, I gets them in this here cab and they're just like other people. They asks me all sorts of places to go.

"When it comes right down to it, I guess there's nobody in this country what's got a monopoly on brains. Ain't that what you say? And the Congressmen—they likes to do the same things we taxicab drivers like to do. Well, I mean like most of the taxicab drivers like to do. Course, you take me, I ain't been married very long so I don't run around much.

"But neverthesoless, I was right surprised when my little missus didn't know what I meant by being back to jungle competition. So I says to her, jungle competition means that you get two packages of matches with a package of cigarettes instead of one and she says, 'Well, I guess you are sho' glad to get back to jungle competition.' That shows how ingorant she is, sometimes—though on other things she's as smart as can be. But she don't understand economics.

"Well, laying all that aside, I don't see where's Mr. Roosevelt goin' to be able to stir up any confusion, do you? Now, I don't see how he's gonna get anybody worried about the loss of the Blue Eagle because only a few people appreciated it before. He won't be able to change our government on that, will he?

"It's too bad for him in view of what he has in mind, that the Supreme Court didn't rule against the processing tax for the farmers. If the Court had done that the farmers woulda been up in arms and Mr. Roosevelt woulda had an issue. That is, he coulda said to the farmers, 'You see what the Supreme Court is denying you, follow me instead of the Supreme Court.' But on account of the NRA not having given anybody anything he won't be able to get us het up on that, will he? It's too bad for Mr. Roosevelt because he sho' do talk nicely, don't he?

"Well, here's where you get out."

Sakdal Attempt In Philippines Proves Abortive When Leader Suddenly Countermands Orders From Japan Which Fail To Reach Outlying Provinces Before Rioting Starts.

By Vicente Albano Pacis,

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Manila.

A REBELLION in central Luzon which might have given the Government—including the United States Army in the Philippines—a lot more to do than merely killing 69 rebels and prosecuting some 1,000 others, including two members of the insular Legislature, might have broken out on May 2 had not the supreme leader of the uprising, in Japan trying to get arms and sympathy, made a false move at the eleventh hour.

The uprising had been set for May 2, the day after May Day, when police and constabulary relax their vigilence against radicals, giving their reseves the day off. Whether the rebels had expected it or not, all civil and military officials were out of the country or in the hinterlands on leave or inspection.

The acting Governor General was in the interior of the mountain province, traveling on horseback where he was contacted only after frantic efforts on May 4. Gen. Frank Parker, commander of the Philippine department of the U. S. Army, was in China. Brig. Gen. Valdes, chief of the Philippine Constabulary, had left on May 1 for some isolated provinces where he was marooned, being unable to return to Manila before May 8. The secretary and undersecretary of the interior, who have direct charge of provincial administration, were in the provinces on inspection. Even the speaker of the House of Representatives, together with other cabinet members, were out on a junket. Gov. Gen. Murphy and Senate President Quezon, the two highest civil officials, were in Washington.

• • • •

TO all appearances, the civil and military branches of the government were blissfully unaware of the vast plot to overthrow the existing order. But Benigno Ramos, the supreme head of the Sakdalists, as the rebels call themselves, who was in Japan partly to enjoy spending the donations of his thousands of followers and partly to seek arms with which to equip his ill-behaved and ill-armed hordes, changed his mind on May 1 and ordered by cable postponement of the uprising to May 14. It is generally believed that Ramos sought to postpone the revolt to this latter date, firstly, because he had so far failed to secure Japanese arms, and, secondly, because May 14 was the date set for the plebiscite of the Philippine constitution and the avowed purpose of the uprising was to prevent acceptance of the constitution.

The postponement order was received in Manila by his immediate lieutenants late on the night of May 1. As the revolt was planned to take place simultaneously in seven provinces, the message could no longer be relayed to all the provincial rebel commands. The result was that the uprising took place in three provinces—Laguna, Bulacan and Cavite.

All in all, the Sakdalists, a few of them armed with shotguns and revolvers, either imported or homemade, all of them ignorant of military science, and their ranks deluded by extravagant promises of reward and good times to come—all in all, they killed two and wounded three constabularly soldiers, and held one provincial governor for 12 hours as hostage. But even with their lack of arms and discipline, they might have done more damage if the Sakdalist command had not crossed its own wires.

THE constabulary, an insular police force of 6,000 men, though noted for its efficiency in coping with snipers and guerillas, being kept in constant practice by Moro malcontents, was not prepared for the emergency. Its intelligence division was not only unaware of the vast plot to blow up Central Luzon but the organization lacked men. Normally, of course, the force is divided into provincial detachments, with its reserves of about 500 men stationed in Manila.

When the municipalities, overrun by the Sakdalists, began to send frantic calls for constublary protection, only detachments of 10 and at the most 30 men could be dispatched. On the second day of the uprising, when practically every town in Central Luzon, either because of sheer alarm or actual danger, was sending an S O S to the central headquarters in Manila, the constabulary had no more men to send.

In its two major operations against the rebels, the constabulary was short-handed. In the battle at Cabuyao, Laguna, where some 1,000 rebels entrenched themselves in the town church and convent, only 98 soldiers could be mustered. It is here that the constabulary massacred 57 Sakdalists and itself suffered a casualty of three wounded. A force of about 15 men also recklessly pursued fleeing rebels estimated to number 3,000 to the mountains of Bulacan, old lairs of bandits and malcontents, traveling on foot, and passing through gorges and ravines in any of which they might have been easily trapped by the Sakdalists.

AS for the town police forces, they were no obstacles at all. Most of them, upon seeing the Sakdalist hordes, chose to surrender peacefully. In several places, the town police surrendered the municipal buildings to the rebels without a shot. It was in the subsequent attempt to dislodge the rebels from these buildings that the constabulary suffered its two casualties, but killing six rebels for each constabulary killed. Ill-armed and unused to dealing with crowds, the town police forces wisely elected discretion as the better part of valor.

The situation was well in hand on the third day. A horde so ignorant and so deluded could not be expected to stick it out after seeing some 70 of their men killed. The majority of those wounded or captured either alleged coercion by the Sakdalists and ignorance of the objective or violence or avowed belief in fantastic things their leaders had boasted about or promised. The Sakdalists have been made to believe that President Roosevelt had promised complete Philippine independence to Ramos in 1935. They have been told that under a Sakdalist government the people will pay very little taxes, if at all. Borrowing from communism, the Sakdal leaders also promised an equal distribution of wealth. The most startling thing is that the Sakdals, including their leaders, apparently believed that after having seized the government buildings they would be the rulers of the country. Of course, they also believed that Japan would send them men and arms. Believing anything favorable to the Sakdal cause and unfavorable to the government and public officials is the regular Sakdal mental process.

The Sakdal as a violent political group participated in its first election only last year, when it succeeded in electing three men to the House of Representatives, one in Tayabas and two in Laguna, the center of the May 2-3 uprising. The Laguna solons, Aurelio Almazan and Mariano Untivero, have been arrested along with some 1,000 others, charged with rebellion.

• • • •

BUT highlight of the Government's attempt to give Sakdalism its due will be the extradition and prosecution of Benigno Ramos, its supreme head, who is now hiding in Japan. Ramos is a born demagogue. A former law student and clerk in the offices of Senate President Quezon, he was discharged for dishonesty. During the following years, he was involved in swindling operations but never convicted. Some three years ago, he founded the Sakdalist party, at the same time opening a weekly newspaper called The Sakdal, published in Tagalog and specializing in libelous, mallicious and even salacious stories and editorials against Quezon, Osmena, Roxas and other Filipino officials, and being decidedly anti-American in tone. It came to be widely read by the poor masses of the Tagalog provinces.

Ramos is not only a born orator but is a natural poet. Even his enemies rate him one of the most powerful contemporary orators in the vernacular. With his paper and his tongue, and his proficiency at demagogy, he soon became the idol of the malcontents of the Tagalog provinces of Central Luzon. Presently, he opened a contribution column in his paper, inducing his readers to contribute voluntarily for the Sakdalist cause. If Father Coughlin can get millions rom his fans, so could Ramos. It was not long before donations of money, ranging from 10 centavos to 10 pesos began to come in cascades. It is said that Ramos went to Japan recently with 50,000 pesos thus collected.

But Ramos may remain in Japan to enjoy this money. Japan has never surrendered fugitives to the Philippines and Ramos is a political refugee. Indeed, the voluble Japanese consul general in Manila has already given it out to the local press as his opinion that Japan will never surrender Ramos. He must have been aware that his statement somewhat gave credence to early rumors that Japan was financing the Sakdalists.

• • • •

"I ORGANIZED a party to fight the Americans," Ramos is meanwhile saying in Japan. "When I fight Manuel Quezon, I am fighting the Americans because Quezon is their ally and he has sold the Philippines. The Americans are only exploiting us. I incited my men to revolt against America to help the Japanese also. Will not the Japanese help me now when America goes after me?"

While Department of Justice officials rack their brains discovering a way to extradite Ramos, special judges and prosecuting attorneys have been assigned to try the Sakdalists for rebellion. Malacanang, doing its part belatedly, has also appointed a committee of American advisers to investigate the root-cause of the uprising. And while Governor General Murphy and Senate President Quezon say in Washington that the economic restrictions imposed by Congress upon the Philippines are partly responsible for the uprising, the acting Governor general has reported to the War Department that the rebellion is entirely political, both in cause and nature.

IT IS a surprising thing how much we think we know, and how little we actually do know. I mean this in no metaphysical sense; it is too trite to talk about the cosmic ignorance of man. What, only, I would point out is that all of us have hundreds of tags at the tip of our tongue—such things as Kant, super-charge, law of supply and demand, atom, sonata, Punic War, chromosome, Dr. Johnson, and so on ad infinitem—and very, very few of us could write an accurate paragraph on each topic of even this little handful. Worst offenders in this game of empty tags are the college graduates. They come out of the academic halls with more discursive verbal ability than you could shake a stick at, and five years later they can't locate the island of Capri or describe the reproduction of oysters. People with simpler educations know a good deal more of what they are talking about, at least.

There's a simple reason for the two sides of this picture—when we learn a thing by words alone we don't really and actually learn it; when we learn a thing by doing it, operating it, living into it, then it sticks in the head.

A little book before me today puts this in different language: "It seems hard to realize sometimes, but it is a fact that we must either practice in our minds what is presented on a subject or, if we do not know how to do that, we actually experience it, if we wish to make it ours."

And that comes, not from any solemn discussion of the philosophy of learning, but from the first chapter of Helen M. Daggett's pamphlet book on "Interior Decorating," No. 16 in that most engaging and valuable series, the "Leisure League Little Books" (Leisure League of America, N. Y., 25 cents each). And what Miss Daggett says of the woman who, with any number of elegant home-decorating magazines before her, still does not know how to begin a decorating job on her own parlor, lifts itself up and becomes applicable to the whole purpose of hobbies.

• • • •

NOW, of course, everybody talks about hobbies being fun. That's true enough, but there's a lot more to it. For hobbies—everything from the care of guppies to the collecting of British colonial stamps—represent our very real hunger for tangible reality in the midst of a pretty generally verbal world.

Perhaps, from my book-reviewing, I might seem to feel this more than most people; but I do not by any manner of means feel it alone. The woman who adds up pay-roll checks all day long in the General Accounting Office certainly aches to get her hands on something a bit more actual to the senses, and I don't mean dusting the apartment, either. The man who writes endless speeches to further the FHA must very often get in a state where he'd give his left hand in order to have something solidly operative to do with his right.

Which hunger is just what these Leisure League booklets answer, and answer well.

IT may sound amusing that Miss Daggett writes about interior decorating in the style of a cook book, but she has a sterling idea there. In brief, taking up the whole house, then each room in turn, then furniture, rugs curtains, lights, etc., she gives the basic elements of "ingredients" necessary in each case, then the additional "ingredients," and then the method of procedure. Elementary this may appear, but I should think it would work wonders in turning wishes and thought into the actuality of new wall paper, fresh color scheme, and lamps which shine where you can really make use of them more than once in a blue moon. There are many clear little pen drawings, a glossary of decorating terms, and a list of further books to look into.

A simple, sprightly, and to-the-point air characterizes all these booklets. With them (and two-bits apiece should let you make the acquaintance of a number of topics before you choose one for your leisure hours) you can delve into photography, hiking, quilting, magic with cards, tropical fish (by Lucile Q. Mann, by the way, wife of the director of the Rock Creek Zoo), inventing, clothes designing, indoor gardening, astronomy, crocheting, motor camping, writing, microscope work, child psychology, party games and stamp collecting. The series is being added to all the time.

And if you don't see what you want, drop the Leisure League a line and they'll try to oblige with a new booklet. And if you have a hobby already under bit and curb which isn't included in the list, tell them about it and you may appear in the series yourself. You'd be in good company.

companies, which carry life, automobile and fire insurance, and in 1932 he admitted that his average annual income for the past 12 years has been $8,000. He now lives in Des Moines, and rides one of his thoroughbred horses every morning. He has thick, cultry black hair, streaked with gray, and deep-set eyes. His personality is friendly and likable.

For many years he was State president of the Farmers Union in Iowa, which has a fluctuating membership of between 10,000 and 12,000 in Iowa. In most of Iowa, the counter organization, the Farm Bureau Federation, is very strong—40,000 to 50,000 members in the State—the largest farm organization in the United States.

He plays ball with the La Folletles and Olson and recently predicted that Floyd Olson would be the next President of the United States. He is down on Washington, where he has been pretty generally snubbed. Reno himself does not have personal political ambitions—he's too old—but he does play adroit politics, bargaining with Iowa candidates. The cooperatives which the Farmers Union started in Iowa has not been successful.

He was instrumental in starting the Farm Holiday movement, but it got beyond his control. The I. W. W.'s have left a deep radical impression in the cornfields of Iowa and once the farmers started "direct action" tactics, they wouldn't stop where Reno wanted them to stop. During the strike, Mary Ellen Vease's old slogan, "Raise less corn and more hell," became increasingly popular.

Reno always denies any tinge of radicalism. He says, "They call us radicals. We're not. All we ask is that the farmers who produce the Nation's food shall receive in return the cost of production."

He realized that the strike was more effective as propaganda to keep the farmers' troubles on page one than it was an an economic weapon. He advocates currency inflation, refinancing of farm mortgages at low interest rates, and cooperation between the farmer and the laborer:

"I'll tell you who will suffer when the farmer and the workingman get together, as they are going to do. It's the usurer. It's the middleman who preys upon both, without performing any useful service. He's got to have his claws clipped," says Reno.

His first practical gesture for third party politics was made in 1934 when he came to New York and suggested a plan to LaGuardia that idle factories, rolling stock of railroads, etc., be placed at the disposal of unemployed workmen and that they exchange goods for farm products.

He still has a tireless denunciatory rhetoric, plenty of energy, despite his 70 years, and an urge to power. He is a shrewd business man and a big, rather attractive midwestern farmer-politician who let himself be whipsawed out of control of the farmers of his section by Rooseveltian charm and Henry Wallace's timely allotment checks. Since 1933 Reno has lost control of the Farmers' Union in Iowa, but he has not let up with his agitating. Although his main influence is still centered in Iowa and South Dakota, his "milk strike" program left him with strong allies among the dairy farmers of the Northeastern States. He can usually turn out from 5,000 to 10,000 farmers of the less prosperous type—mostly tenants—for a rally or parade, but is too intent on making farming a capitalistic business in which a profit is guaranteed to cultivate durable relations with the urban radicals.

At the end of April, 1935, Reno held a mass meeting of New Deal dissenters at Des Moines to which he invited Long, Coughlin, Olson, Townsend, and others, but only Long appeared on the scene.

Reno has been a bitter critic of Henry Wallace, of Roosevelt and the AAA. He supports the Farmers' Union program: cost of production guaranteed to the farmer, reduction of interest on farm mortgage to 1 per cent or less. All Western agrarian programs are about identical and the significance of Reno is not his program but the fact that he taught the Western farmers how to use direct action in 1932-33. The marching farm armies in State capitols—they are still marching in the drought areas—were the result of his leadership. Under his banner in Iowa, all kinds of Reds have enlisted to take a try at direct action, and in 1933 he even drew a certain number of Communist sympathizers from the East.

He is temporarily at a disadvantage because Iowa is doing relatively well out of the New Deal, but he is the key to the poorer-class farmer and the less prosperous tenants in this, the richest farming section of the country, and he has kept clear enough of conventional politics to provide a good neutral rallying-ground for the left wingers.

The difficulty with his program, as indeed with the program of most Western agrarian leaders, is the fact that American farming is not a business but that the farmer is a business man. Much unctuous sentiment is breathed about the fact that farming is "a way of life," whatever that means, as well as about the natural wonders of country life and the nobility of the farmer. The truth is, of course, that farming is largely a residue of those economic activities which have not been industrially specialized and hence is bound to become progressively less economic and less profitable as specialization catches up with agriculture. This is the rock which has shattered every political effort to find a satisfactory place for individual farm properties in an industrial capitalistic system.

The second, and equally great difficulty is the fact that the American farmer on the average, being a petty capitalist, though playing a losing game, is property-minded to an almost incredible degree. His interest is not in the cooperative commonwealth, in industrial democracy, a balanced economy, or economic or social justice. His interest is in getting the largest possible personal income from his farm, with the least conceivable amount of outside interference. Hence the bright and hopeful efforts to team him up with the urban radicals in any movement more far-reaching than the Scandinavian type of cooperation proposed in Olson's Minnesota are doomed to crushing disappointment, unless it is clearly understood that socialism is not to be applied to farming. Even those farmers at the bottom of the ladder, the white tenants and day-labor and harvest-hands of the wheat and corn States, are horrified at the idea of huge industrial farms, whether privately controlled or operated on the order of the Russian collective farms, and are disposed to demand a chain-store technique of graduated taxation to prevent scientific farm production from displacing the traditional medium-sized pioneer homestead.

For the farm belters are bourgeois to a man, and the Mississippi Valley is inhabited by people whom Stalin would term kulaks and Mussolini and Hitler would regard as peasants, and who offer little foothold for the preaching of "scientific socialism." Hence a third party movement which aspired to link them to the EPIC planners of the West Coast and the industrial "proletarians" and under-privileged groups of the East would have to devise a formula by which the farmer would be left free in an industrially socialized state.

Ten Best Productions

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps.

AT MY request the eminent statesman and publicist, the Hon. James M. Beck, of Washington, D. C., has been kind enough to name for me the ten greatest productions (as distinguished from play-value) he has ever seen.

I think the most delightful production I ever saw was "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in the courtyard of Heidelberg Castle. Next to that I would put the performance of "Othello" with Salvini as Othello, Edwin Booth as Iago and Modjeska as Desdemona. Next, I think I would rank "The Rivals" with Mrs. John Drew as Mrs. Malaprop, Joe Jefferson as Bob Acres, Maurice Barrymore as Captain Absolute and William J. Florence as Sir Lucius O'Trigger. Could you beat that cast today? Then I would select the "Merchant of Venice" as given by Henry Irving and Ellen Terry, although from the standpoint of individual acting I think Irving, whom I saw in at least 20 different roles, was greatest in "Louis XI" and "The Bells." Next I would put the performance of "Everyman" at Salzburg in the open plaza before the old cathedral.

• • • •

I have seen at least 25 actors play Hamlet, including three Italian actors, two French actors, three or four English actors and the rest American actors. Upon the whole I think the best performance of the play was by a German company at Leipzig, but it would be difficult to select the best performance of the title role. I would not rank that of Edwin Booth above many others. Salvini, Russi, Irving, Forbes-Robertson were better interpretations in my judgment, and an Italian whose name was Ruggeri, and a French actor who played the part two summers ago in the Comedie Francaise were as good as any. To me the most lovable Hamlet was Forbes-Robertson, but the French and German actors, not being hidebound by the traditions of the English stage, gave far more original and striking interpretations of this greatest of all roles.

Of course one could not ignore Sara Bernhardt, who once told me that Hamlet was her favorite role. I did not see her in Hamlet, but I saw her in six or seven plays, and it would be difficult to say in which she was greatest. She was superb in all of them. So I might ramble on, but I thought that you might be interested in these suggestions of one who remembers the theater in its great days.

• • • •

Others we recall because of the great acting of one or more players, as for example Rossi in "King Lear," and Richard Mansfield in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and "A Parisian Romance." Joe Jefferson's interpretation of Caleb Plummer is also a never-to-be-forgotten memory; and among other ineffaceable stage memories are Miss Beryl Mercer's playing of the old charwoman in "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals," and George Gaul in the strangest of all dramatizations, "The Tragedy of Job."

If I were asked to state what was the greatest piece of individual acting I ever saw, I would unhesitatingly say Salvini as Othello.

Germans Reach London to Talk Sea Strengths

Firm Opposition Due to Meet Naval Proposals in Britain.

By the United Press.

London, June 2.—The German naval delegation, headed by Baron Joachim von Ribbentrop, arrived by airplane from Berlin today for preliminary conversations with the British on sea strengths.

The conversations concentrated British attention on the German challenge to their naval supremacy, voiced by Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler as part of his rearmament program.

He bases his demands on a navy one-third as strong as that of Great Britain, or about 400,000 tons—a further violation of the arms clause of the Treaty of Versailles. This will be the basis of the parleys in which some measure of German sea rearmament may be agreed upon by Britain.

Program Unacceptable.

However, the British have let it be generally known that they consider the German sea program unacceptable. They compute that a navy of 400,000 tons for the Reich would actually afford Germany naval parity, if not superiority, over the British fleet in the North Sea and thus render the British Isles vulnerable to naval attack—a thing unthinkable for generations.

Hitler's policy of aerial expansion already has aroused acute alarm in Britain. His naval policy now also appears to be aggravating British uneasiness further. The government already is engaged in an air armaments race with Germany, and harassed British taxpayers are wondering whether revival of the former Anglo-German naval competition is to be the next indulgence awaiting their sorely tried pocketbooks.

The British hope therefore to dissuade the Germans from their five-year naval program designed to bring the Reich's navy up to the 400,000-ton mark.

Factors Favoring Reich.

Experts agreed that if Hitler fulfills this plan, the Reich's actual fighting strength would be far greater than one-third of Britain's They point to two factors which will act in Germany's favor:

1. Her warships would be new and technically the most modern afloat, while most of Britain's warships will be over-age and worn out."

2. Britain's warcraft will be scattered over the seven seas, safeguarding trade routes. Germany, without colonies, could concentrate her entire fleet in home waters, menacing the British in time of war.

The British have announced they will conduct the forthcoming naval conversations "on the basis of existing Versailles treaty restrictions." But this policy, it is believed, will soon prove untenable, and Britain will be forced to acknokledge that the Reich's navy soon is to be enlarged—and seek the best out of a bad deal.

The speaker revealed that his conviction that preparedness was the best policy was reached after 35 years of teaching in schools that the Army and Navy were unnecessary.

Dickerson, of Ioa, will be the principal speaker at a Republican outing and ox roast to be held at Rosemont Park, this city, on West Virginia Day, Thursday, June 20, by the newly formed tri-county Republican organization, it was announced at a meeting of Republicans here last night.

Our Facts Are Grade A, Too

THE milk business is a factual business.

We test our facts as thoroughly as we test our milk.

In fact, a fact is not a fact until it is checked and rechecked.

We know that we shall endure only as long as we tell the truth about our products and our services.

We don't believe that the cleverest advertising is the best advertising.

After Lincoln and Douglas debated people said, "What a wonderful orator Douglas is—but Lincoln was right."

True, the turn of an adroit phrase or a striking illustration may effect a sale—once or twice.

But for the long pull, day in and day out, over and over again, the advertising must be honest and sincere if it is to count in the customer's mind.

In these times, when people are weighing all values anew, the business built on truth finds inviting opportunity to make its case.

The corporate milkman makes truth the standard of his salesmanship and service.

He doesn't put his label on outlaw milk; nor does he sponsor unverified statements about quality, costs, and the like.

It will be a genuine pleasure to show you—in person or by letter—that our facts are on straight.

Nat'l City Bank Sees Benefits In NRA's Loss

Arbitrary Schedules Hinder Recovery, Bulletin Says.

New York, June 2.—The new possibility presented by the Supreme Court decision is that price competition may be conducted by reducing wages and increasing hours, if industry is of that mind; but there is little reason to think that this will generally be the case, according to the monthly letter of the National City Bank to be published tomorrow. The letter adds:

"American business men have no wish to be niggardly with labor; as a class they believe in the doctrine of good wages, and the attitude of responsible employers throughout the depression has been in accord with that belief. After the decline began they withheld wage cuts in most cases until 1931, hoping that improvement would make them unnecessary. They have readily accepted the wage increases established under the NRA, even though it became evident that the advances were being put into effect more rapidly than the productivity of labor could justify, and that the resulting price increases were handicapping trade.

Wages Have Been Tested.

"Since these wage increases were established more than a year and a half has elapsed, and in that period technical improvements increasing labor productivity have been made, business has improved, and the manufacturing industries have climbed from the red into the black. The ability to support the NRA scales has increased accordingly. Also, business is better organized to preserve higher standards of competition than ever before. Business men have had a new experience in cooperation, and unquestionably the great majority desire to preserve its benefits.

"The public announcements made by many corporations and trade associations since the decision, stating their intention to abide by code standards, show that the foregoing correctly describes the employers' attitude. These announcements give responsible assurances against an epidemic of wage cutting as long as business conditions will permit the industries to pay present scales; and fortunately there are many features in the business situation, as described in the following pages of this letter, which are encouraging.

Reactions of the Decision.

"The foregoing comments, however, should not obscure the fact that the decision will be beneficial in the long run precisely because it abandons arbitrary wage and price fixing. An economic situation supported by arbitrary regulations is almost certain to be unstable, and to inspire endless worry and distrust; and the decision removes an obstacle to the natural efforts of business to find a more stable equilibrium, in which genuine confidence can be felt.

"It should be recognized that there are some arbitrarily maintained wage levels, notably in the railways and the building industry, and some pegged prices, which are obstacles to recovery. Wages and prices should be free to respond to economic pressure, whether it is operating to lower or raise them, for when they are arbitrarily fixed the self-balancing character of the economic system is impaired. The conduct of trade, which is the exchange of goods and services, depends upon the maintenance of fair and practicable terms of exchange, and such terms can be had only when costs and prices are free to alter as conditions alter. Hence the system does not work well when there are rigid and inflexible elements in it and its freedom of adjustment is interfered with."

Asbury Park Leads in Debt

Moline and Quincy, Ill., Report No Net Obligations.

New York, June 2.—Webster Kennedy & Co. have issued the June edition of their semi-annual bulletin of comparative debt statements which includes the debt of all cities in the United States with a population of over 30,000, certain smaller municipalities and the most important countries, as well as all 48 States.

With the cities included in the bulletin divided into population groups, a weighted average of the most important ratios given shows a range in the ratio of direct net debt to 100 per cent assessment of from 7 per cent for cities with over 1,000,000 population down to 2.3 per cent for the group with a population of 30,000 to 50,000; per capita net direct debt of $139.03 down to $48.38, and a per capita net debt including overlapping debt of $175.16 down to $58.20.

Asbury Park, N. J., is shown to have the highest net direct debt, $316, while Moline, Ill., and Quincy, Ill., have no direct net debt, and Bay City, Mich., a per capita debt of only 48 cents. Among the counties, the highest debt shown is that of Putnam County, N. Y., $210.60 per capita, and the lowest, Fulton County, Ga., 40 cents.

Steel Remains Steady Under New Freedom

Slight Effect Is Noted; Output Off 1½% to 42½% Capacity.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 2.—On the surface, iron and steel markets last week were little affected by the Supreme Court's NRA decision, states the magazine Steel.

Prices—uncontrolled for the first week since August 19, 1933—apparently were as steady as at any time since the code was adopted.

Production yielded more to holiday influences, and steel ingot output dropped 1½ points to 42½ per cent.

Producers and consumers, however, were keenly alert to the potentialities of a suddenly unrestrained market. Steel makers gave every indication of their intention to adhere to the principles of their code. Just as prescribed by the rules, they opened books Saturday, 30 days before the beginning of the third quarter, at unchanged prices for that period, as announced officially ten days ago.

First reaction from buyers was a flood of inquiries for "real," or inside prices. Some offered to place orders at lower figures; a tempting tonnage of steel sheets was held before a Pittsburgh interest. A few even claimed to have received lower quotations on steel strip.

At this stage, there is virtually a deadlock between producers and consumers; the former standing firm; the latter's strategy being to wait.

Structural shape awards were down to 5,047 tons, though bids were opened on three Western public works projects requiring a total of 25,000 tons. Chesapeake & Ohio's inquiry for 5,125 freight cars and five locomotives calls for 65,000 tons of steel. This is the largest demand for cars since the Van Sweringen lines awarded 13,000 last year. Texas & Pacific placed 7,500 tons of rails; Canadian Pacific 7,000 tons. A Western road purchased 1,500 tons of sheets for car roof repairs.

Exchange to Abide By Securities Act

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 2.—Charles R. Gay, president of the New York Stock Exchange, said today that the governing committee of the exchange has not considered and does not contemplate any action looking toward a test of the constitutionality of the securities and exchange act of 1934.

The exchange explained that Mr. Gay's statement was issued in response to inquiries presumably prompted by the raising of the question of the constitutionality of the SEC. In the light of the Supreme Court's NRA decision, at President Roosevelt's recent press conference.

Blaw-Knox Forms Public Works Unit

Pittsburgh, June 2.—The Blaw-Knox Co. announces that in order to take care of the expected demand from the public works program more adequately, a new division is being formed, to be known as the construction equipment division.

This is a consolidation of its several departments now marketing construction equipment and Robert T. Harris, formerly managing director of the company's English affiliates, has been placed in charge of this new division.

Cotton-Piece Trade Holds Down Output

The cotton-piece-goods industry is believed to be in a fair statistical position to resist attempts to weaken the price structure, according to well informed cotton men.

A substantial reduction in output of print cloths since April 1 has helped to hold production to the level of sluggish demand while unfilled orders were generally holding their own, it was said.

County Set-Up Asked To Fill in Relief Gap

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., June 2.—The welfare board, which directs the distribution of Federal relief in Washington County, has been asked by Harry Greenstein, State relief administrator, to carry on until the Board of State Aid and Charities organizes and begins functioning under the act passed at the recent Legislature, which became effective yesterday.

Under this act, board of county commissioners in each of the Maryland counties will name six of the seven members of relief boards from a list of 12 names submitted by county boards. These six, with a member of the county commissioners, will serve as agents of the State board in the distribution of relief in their respective counties.

Spider Bite Fatal to Boy.

Home Building Running 80% Ahead of 1934

Total of $22,072,500 Is Reported for First Half of May.

New York, June 2.—Residential building continues to reflect encouraging improvement. For the initial half of May, contracts let for this class of construction were approximately 80 per cent ahead of the total shown in the corresponding period of May 1934. For the 37 states east of the Rocky Mountains F. W. Dodge Corporation reported a residential building total of $22,072,500 for the first 15 days of May; during the first half of April the total was $20,610,900 while for the initial 15 days of May, 1934, the volume was only $12,421,500.

The contract total for all classes of construction inclusive of residential building amounted to $60,961,300 for the initial half of May as against $61,969,900 for the first half of April and $67,181,400 for the first 15 days of May 1934, the Dodge organization reports.

The April construction contract volume exceeded the total for March by a small margin. A loss from the volume reported for April of last year was shown, however, due to a falling off in awards under the old PWA program. April contracts totaled $124,098,000, as against $122,940,500 for March and $131,157,000 for April, 1934.

Gains in residential building were shown in April in each of the principal geographic territories as compared with last year except for the New England and the New Orleans areas.

This improvement over a year ago in residential building bids fair to continue for the remainder of the current year judging from the figures on contemplated projects. Contemplated residential building reported in April amounted to $99,721,900, as against only $54,483,000 for March and $55,074,300 for April of last year.

Cotton Expert Is Optimistic

Premature Now to Judge Status of AAA, Says C. T. Revere.

New York, June 2.—A note of moderate optimism in regard to the future of the AAA and the outlook for the cotton market following the NRA Supreme Court decision was sounded today by C. T. Revere, economist and partner in Munds, Winslow & Potter, members of the New York Stock Exchange.

While emphasizing the state of confusion into which many markets have been thrown by the NRA decision, Mr. Revere points out that although the AAA may face a severe legislative test, no case is likely to come up for decision until late autumn.

"It is needless," he says, "to emphasize the fact that the Supreme Court decision in the NRA case has thrown most markets into such a state of confusion that it will require the clarifying influence of time and developments to permit formation of an opinion as to definite price trends. In the case of cotton, as well as other commodities, there has been a disposition to jump to the conclusion that the validity of the agricultural adjustment program will face a severe test before the same tribunal. While markets have a habit of discounting coming events, it seems a bit premature to pre-judge the status of the AAA, inasmuch as no case is likely to come up for decision until well into the autumn.

"Moreover, it might be pointed out that such essential features as the acreage control plan particularly does not come within the scope of the principles set forth in the NRA decision, as they do not represent delegation of power and involve no criticism on the ground of compulsion. There are other features such as licensing and taxation which are not believed likely to stand up under a constitutional test."

Insurance Stocks Reach New Highs

New York, June 2.—Insurance stocks in the New York City market reached a new high for 1935 during the past week, according to figures compiled by Hoit, Rose & Troster, the aggregate value of 20 leading fire and casualty insurance issues on May 27 amounting to $547,679,000.

The 20 issues declined at the close of the week, however, the aggregate value on May 31 being $535,551,000 against $542,078,000 at the close of the previous week, a net decrease for the week of $6,527,000, or 1.20 per cent. The low for the year, reached on March 14, was $484,613,000.

Ending of Codes Creates a Number of New Problems That Increase Uncertainty as to Business Prospects in Various Lines of Industry and Trade.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, June 2.—The sweeping decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Schechter Poultry Corporation case setting aside the NRA codes and limiting the extent of Federal control over interstate commerce has injected a number of new legal and legislative uncertainties into the business outlook.

New Deal legislation and plans had already created an unprecedented situation, in which business men found themselves governed by developments in Washington to a greater degree than ever before. However, hopes had been entertained that by the close of the present session of Congress the legislative situation might be fairly well clarified, so that the various lines of industry could learn definitely what to expect in the way of new legislation and regulation. The Schechter case not only makes more uncertain than ever the nature of additional legislation which Congress is likely to enact at the present session, but it throws a pall of uncertainty over most existing New Deal measures and regulations affecting business and finance.

Among the fundamental questions that business men in various lines are asking are the following:

1. To what extent will wage levels and working conditions be maintained?

A number of enterprises, large and small, have already announced that they contemplate no changes of any kind in wages and hours.

Want 48 Hour Work Week Standard.

Another group of employers state that, while wage scales will be left alone and may even be raised if living costs remain high, the standard working week must be lengthened to at least 48 hours in the interests of efficiency. Such a long work week, with unchanged or even higher hourly rates, appears likely in the automobile, iron and steel, food and other basic manufacturing lines. The result will be the elimination of the "spread the work" principle that had been embodied in the maximum hours provisions in the codes. Advocates of the lower work week argue that it will so increase efficiency as to lower unit production costs. This will permit the lowering of prices to the consumers, and hence an increased volume of output.

A third group indicates that they can maintain wages and working conditions only so long as competitive conditions permit. They feel, however, that the pressure to get business will cause wage and price cutting to break out simultaneously before long, where it has not already occurred, especially among smaller concerns, and that they will have to follow suit. Of course, the militant attitude of labor union leaders will be a deterrent in strongly organized industries.

2. Will prices of manufactured goods be reduced?

Resident buying offices in New York are especially sensitive to the changing attitude of department stores and other retailers throughout the country. They report a number of cases where the stores are refraining from buying except at material reductions from prices prevailing before the Schechter decision was handed down. The next few weeks are expected to be crucial in determining whether existing prices of many manufactured goods can be maintained under the shock of the code collapse.

Processing Tax Status Worries Several Industries.

3. Will the processing taxes be maintained?

Doubt as to the constitutionality of various sections of the agricultural adjustment act has been intensified by the Schechter decision, despite some reassuring statements from Washington. In particular, the processing taxes are regarded as questionable because they are applied for the benefit of a particular group or class, rather than for the general welfare. The lifting of these taxes would undermine the crop control plan of the Government, and thus ndanger the present artificially high level of farm prices. Also, a fall in prices of products subject to processing levies by at least the amount of the tax would tend to occur immediately, if the levy should be held unconstitutional in the pending test case.

Particular concern is felt about the sugar processing tax, because of the enormous stocks of refined sugar now held by wholesale grocers on which processing taxes have been paid. The sugar situation is complicated further by the proposal to annul reciprocal trade agreements under the new tariff act, on the ground that the latter was an unwarranted delegation of power to the President by Congress. This would restore the Cuban sugar tariff to the rate of $1.50 per hundred pounds, as compared with the present rate of 90 cents, and so reduce the price of Cuban raw sugar as quoted in the New York market accordingly. Trading on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange has been badly disorganized by this prospect, following the introduction of a resolution in Congress to abrogate these treaties by Senator Vandenberg.

Where processing taxes have been paid under protest, suits to recover such payments are certain if they should be held unconstitutional.

4. Will legislation be passed to maintain the more rigid systems of production and price control that have been applied by the codes to the natural resource industries?

Conditions in the coal industry are especially chaotic, with price cutting reported breaking out in various producing regions and a nation-wide strike threatening seriously because the unions and some operators hope it will hasten special regulatory legislation which they desire. The pending Guffey coal bill would provide rigid price and production control, and Government purchase of marginal mines.

Legislation will also be sought, it has already been indicated, to permit copper, oil and other natural resource industries to continue their present control arrangements without fear of anti-trust law prosecution. Provisions in such special industry legislation to compel adherence to production and price regulation, however, will doubtless be challenged on the ground that they apply to intrastate as well as interstate commerce, leaving the ultimate competitive status of these industries open to many uncertainties.

Low Rates Put Bonds Higher

Government and Prime Issues Advance Into New Ground.

New York, June 2.—"Excess bank reserves and low rates have continued to furnish strong support to the bond market and to push prices of numerous Government and other prime grade bonds into new high ground," says the June announcement of the National City Bank, which continues:

"A number of additional new issues were sold during the month for the purpose of refunding other issues bearing higher coupons that will mature this year or that have been called, or to refund bank loans. The largest offering was $50,000,000 first mortgage 4 per cent bonds of the National Steel Corporation, due in 1965 and priced at 100½.

"Some of the new bonds sold this spring carry the lowest coupons that have been used since the late '90s, in the period of depressions which followed the panic of 1893 and accompanied the agitation over the standard of value at that time. In the plethora of accumulating funds at that time, a number of railroad issues with a coupon rate of 3½ per cent were marketed and a few as low as 3 per cent. In the subsequent course of business revival, money came into demand, rates strengthened and these low rate issues suffered market declines.

"Much was said at that time to the effect that owing to the growth of wealth interest rates probably had suffered a permanent decline, and similar talk is heard now. Events have proven that the low rates of that period were caused by the slackening of enterprise and loss of confidence resulting from the political agitation."

Business Waits Steady Breeze, Charted Course

By the Associated Press.

The NRA legal upset, described by President Roosevelt as a threat to other economic controls erected under the New Deal, has forced business to take new soundings in charting its future course.

The sudden downfall of NRA codes at hands of the Supreme Court left business analysts, in common with officials, groping for an answer to the question: "Will business be left to work out its own salvation, or will new control mechanisms be evolved?

Indications were that the Administration, unwilling to abandon the results of two years of experiment in financial and industrial regulation, would seek the latter. But it faces a formidable hurdle in the Supreme Court's conception of interstate business.

Surveying the wreckage of the most ambitious attempt in the country's history to supplant old economic rules of free competition with Government-enforced regulations, a battle which undoubtedly will be renewed, the Capital strained its ears to catch from financial and trade centers the first hints of what readjustments might be in prospect in light of the NRA ruling.

Secondarily, it was interested in the crisis of the French franc.

What it heard was sufficient to convince many that business faced another interlude of unsettlement, and some deflation of prices, while it went through a period of transition.

In the confusion of the past week, gloomy forebodings of NRA champions mingled with the rejoicing of those who predicted the court ruling would free business from a straitjacket and permit it to renew its vitality, with whatever self-imposed restraints might be found desirable. The court knocked the legal props from under NRA codes as trade and industry were sliding into the usual quiet of early summer.

Detroit Calls Water Bonds

$2,672,245, Bearing Up to 5½ Per Cent Interest to Be Refunded.

New York, June 2.—The City of Detroit has announced through the Bankers Trust Co. of New York, fiscal agents, that it has called for redemption several issues of its outstanding water refunding bonds, aggregating $2,672,245.79, which bear interest at the rates of 5½, 5 and 5½ per cent.

These bonds are expected to be replaced by a new issue of bonds for approximately a similar amount bearing lower coupon rates, bids for which will be asked in the near future. Long term Detroit 4 per cent water bonds are currently quoted in the open market to yield from 3.70 to 3.75 per cent, and 8 to 10-year bonds are quoted to yield about 3.50 per cent.

The various issues of water bonds of the City of Detroit, to be called for redemption, are as follows: $1,187,245.79 of 4½ per cent; registered water refunding bonds, series "B," to be redeemed on August 1, 1935; $754,000 of 5½ per cent bonds to be redeemed on October 1, 1935; $26,000 of 5 per cent bonds to be redeemed on October 16, 1935, and $705,000 of 5 per cent bonds to be redeemed on November 1, 1935.

New Lumber Orders 49% Over Output

The lumber movement during the week ended May 25, continued its decline of the past three weeks with production, shipments and orders dropping from the levels of previous weeks. New business was however 49 per cent above production.

Orders and shipments were also somewhat in excess of those of similar week of 1934. These comparisons are based upon telegraphic reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations, covering the operations of 935 leading hardwood and softwood mills.

New York, June 2.—The Reading Co. is refunding to employes the deductions made under provisions of the Federal railroad retirement act voided by the Supreme Court. Higher Income Cuts Deficit Of Government

But Gross Public Debt Rose to 28.6 Billions at End of April.

New York, June 2—The Federal Treasury deficit for the first ten months of the current fiscal year amounted to $2,768,000,000, as against $3,334,000,000 in the corresponding period a year ago, according to the current bulletin of the Guaranty Trust Company. The gross public debt at the end of April totaled $28,668,000,000, as compared with $26,118,000,000 a year earlier. The bulletin continues:

"The principal factor in the reduction of the deficit was the increase in receipts. Revenue from income taxes, miscellaneous internal revenue, processing taxes, and seigniorage rose sharply, while customs receipts increased slightly and Panama Canal tolls showed a negligible decline.

"The increase in revenue was only partly offset by a rise in general expenditures, with the result that the ordinary budget showed a moderate surplus, in contrast to the deficit reported a year earlier.

"The Treasury reported on May 9 that the Government is paying a lower average interest rate on its debt than at any other time since 1916. It was computed that, at the end of April, the Treasury was paying an annual interest charge equal to 2.793 per cent of the amount of the outstanding debt, as compared with 2.376 per cent at the middle of 1916 and 4.339 per cent at the middle of 1921," the post-war peak.

"On May 12, the Treasury announced that subscriptions aggregating $678,000,000 had been received for the Treasury bonds of 1955-60 offered in exchange for First Liberty Loan bonds. With $863,000,000 of the First Liberty bonds exchanged for Treasury notes of Series A-1940, the total amount of Liberty bonds exchanged up to that time was about $1,541,000,000, or approximately 80 per cent of the amount outstanding. Subscription books for the Treasury notes closed on May 2 and those for the Treasury bonds on May 23.

Oil Men Study Reversed Deal

Wages and Hours Will Remain, Says Byles.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 2.—A special meeting of the board of directors of the American Petroleum Institute, largest petroleum trade association, has been called for Wednesday, June 5, in the institute's offices here to consider the situation arising from the U. S. Supreme Court decision on the NIRA. In his call for the meeting the institute's president, Axtell J. Byles, said:

"It is assumed that no one will disturb the present status of employes with respect to wages and hours. It is further assumed that all operations will be conducted in conformity with sound and fair business practices."

$35,000,000 Equipment Orders.

New York, June 2 (AP).—With the Chesapeake & Ohio in the market for 5,000 freight cars and New York City inquiring for 500 subway cars, there is estimated to around $35,000,000 worth of equipment business on the market at the present time, the largest since early in 1934.

Labor Chiefs Sense Danger Of Wage Cuts

But Most Industries Declare Themselves Against Changes.

By Claude A. Jagger.

Associated Press Financial Editor.

New York, June 2.—(AP)—Suddenly bereft of its code entrenchments, the nation's business is struggling to hold the line of recovery. Throughout the land, business leaders were quick to announce after Monday's surprise court decision on NRA that they planned no cuts in wages, lengthening of hours of work or changes in pricing or competitive business practices.

Yet reports of wage cuts and increased working hours quickly came trickling in to an extent sufficient to agitate labor leaders, particularly in textile and garment trades. And a sudden slump in sensitive staple markets, notably raw sugar and cotton, prompted purchasing agents and buyers, both for mills and stores, to step out of the markets until the general price outlook might clarify.

Effects on Business Slight.

The immediate effect upon business activity, however, appeared to have been meager. Manufacturers had made their forward commitments with the idea that NRA might not be renewed with its expiration June 16. Retail trade was stimulated by warm weather, preparations for the Memorial Day holiday, and scattered price cutting in a few lines such as cigarets, books and toilet articles.

Many business leaders were anxious to salvage all or part of their codes, and some were fearful that a return of old practices of ruthless competition would retard the forward movement. Others were hopeful, however, that quick adjustment to new conditions would bring buyers back into the markets.

Some were frankly pleased to see the codes go.

Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president of General Motors Corporation, asserted that the effect of the Supreme Court decision would be highly constructive. He said, "we no longer need to promote recovery, but we do need to stop obstructing it." He said General Motors was not contemplating any reduction in wages.

Steel Sticks to Code.

Of the major industries, steel was notably anxious to keep its code. Heads of several companies announced no changes in wages and prices. Steel buying slackened, but the industry hoped to convince consumers that present prices would stick. Directors of the American Iron and Steel Institute plan to meet Monday to consider methods of preserving its code, particularly the open price system which has effectively ended secret discounts and rebates.

Some units in the petroleum industry found the time ripe to announce a 5 per cent increase in wages. "The abandonment of the oil code should not be followed by any serious disturbances in the industry," opined Walter C. Teagle, president of Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, one of the companies raising wages.

Probably most seriously upset were those industries which have been working under elaborate plans to control raw material prices. Copper, with its production control plan and its pegged 9 cent domestic price, and sugar, with the price of its raw product recently advanced by the workings of Jones-Costigan act to the highest level in seven years, were cases in point.

Jehovah's Witnesses Set a Crowd Record in Meeting Here.

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

It was a beautiful day yesterday, but 20,000 persons passed up communing with nature to hear a tall, florid-faced man in a palm beach suit tell them in a booming voice that Armageddon is at hand but they, Jehovah's witnesses, will be saved.

The tall gentleman in the wing collar and red bow tie was none other than Judge Joseph F. Rutherford. The occasion was his speech on Government which, as announcements said, was "flashed by WOL and the most unique and extensive combination of wire and wireless communication facilities and public address appliances . . . to waiting millions at auditoriums, homes, parks . . . in every State on this continnent, in South and Central America, in the British Isles, in France, Belgium, Netherlands, Switzerland, Germany, Finland and other European States, in Iceland, Africa and Australia, in Palestine, India, Java and the Far East, the isles of the sea and to the ends of the earth," not forgetting Rawson Square, Washington, D. C.

Two hours before the scheduled hours of the momentous speech you couldn't get into Washington Auditorium with a shoehorn, let alone a police pass. Ten minutes before the sermon you couldn't get out because a small army of strong-armed gentry stationed themselves at every entrance and exit in order to assure complete silence.

Outside, in Rawson Square and on E street thousands milled about while chair-renting companies did a land office business. When, in the cleared space on Nineteenth street, a long yellow car slid to a stop before the side entrance of the Auditorium to let his honor alight, a mighty roar went up. It was reverbrated through the half dozen loud speakers as the leader of Jehova's Witnesses, fully 15,000 of whom had come from almost every State in the Union to see and hear him, went to the platform.

Hundreds had begun arriving before 10 o'clock, and by 3 in the afternoon police estimated that between 20,000 and 25,000 men, women and children were on hand. Many had brought their lunches with them, so that they would not lose their comfortable seats. The basement was jammed and a special loud speaker was there. Upstairs in the various rooms set aside for the multifarious affairs of the convention, officers and delegates sat in their shirt sleeves ready to listen.

It was one of the strangest conventions ever seen in Washington. The preponderance of "witnesses" were middle-aged, and judging by the car tags in the vicinity and in parking lots all over the city, the majority came from the Middle West, Florida and California. They include all sorts of people, some prosperous appearing and some obviously without any worldly goods. Almost all of them go about reading Judge Rutherford's books and pamphlets, but a great many of them go about selling the same.

All Records Broken.

Yesterday's gathering broke records for a religious meeting in the history of the city, great as anything Billy Sunday ever drew, greater than the crowd which jammed the same building several years ago before Sister Aimee McPherson had lost her great "following."

Accompanying the judge were several huskies who were adepts at shoving people out of his way, a middle-aged woman, and a snappy brunette who drove his long yellow, speedy, and expensive Cadillac car. The huskies rode on the running board, the judge and the gray-haired lady sat in back. Nobody would tell who they were, reporters not being particularly liked among the "witnesses."

A group of the faithful joined hands in a daisy-chain fashion so that His Honor, whose slogan "thousands now living shall never see death" appeared for a moment to be negated by the shoving and pushing multitude. However, there were no casualties and Judge Rutherford, the brunette, and the lady entered the Auditorium intact.

Hard to Understand.

There was complete silence inside and out when the judge began his message which rattled through the huge spaces of the Auditorium to frequent outbursts of applause. The 10,000 witnesses inside strained at every word and frowned with annoyance at even the suggestion of an offside interruption. There was need of rapt attention, for it was difficult for even the closest follower to understand just what the judge was talking about. Nevertheless, he spoke in rounded accents, rolling his words out, or sharpening them whenever he desired to stress a point.

Every third or fourth sentence, it seemed, was a quotation from the gloomier portions of Scripture.

"The day of Armageddon, the battle of the day of God Almighty, is at hand," he said, amidst applause.

He attacked, in sonorous sentences, the wastefulness of war, the greed of war makers, and urged his followers to join the army of the Lord. Armageddon, he shouted, will "not be fought by the nited States against Japan," but by the "holy and righteous angels" against the forces of darkness.

He quoted freely from the story of Joshua, made frequent references to passages about floods and tidal waves engulfing a wicked world.

"At Armageddon," he said, "God will remember the indignities that are heaped upon the people of the world."

Some may be killed, he said, in fighting the battle, but he intimated that such a death might be considered as glorious. Just what the battle would be for was not quite clear, but he indicated that a new government, presumably made up of Jehova's Witnesses, is sorely needed. At least it was clear that Judge Rutherford has no use for the present one.

When the new government comes, he said that none will be forbidden to do what God has commanded him to do. "Who will be the ruler of this government?" he asked.

"Jesus Christ," he shouted, red in the face, "will be the invisible ruler. But the visible ruler? Who will he be? He certainly will not be any man now connected with the present government — whether Postmaster General, or anyone else."

That settled, Judge Rutherford painted a glowing picture of life in this world after the great battle has been won.

"Who will be among us then?" he cried, and one and every man, woman, and most of the children, jumped to their feet, threw their arms in the air, and shouted in unison, "I will."

The meeting was over. Judge Rutherford was done speaking. Inside, the loud speaker forbade anyone to leave his seat until the judge had passed out. Outside thousands thronged around the big yellow car. They crowded the entrance and the strong-armed men had a chance to hold hands again. The few policemen on duty left the husky "witnesses" to clear a path for His Honor, while they got the car down the street to the doorway.

Is a Tract Society.

Out came the judge, blinking his eyes, after the gray-haired woman and the pretty brunette had got into the car. He smiled and bowed from the height of fully six feet, a striking figure in his now crumpled Palm Beach suit. His red tie had drooped. His standup wing collar had wilted. But he smiled like a conquering hero, like a Lindbergh of the Lord.

Although the gathering is informally known as "Jehovah's Witnesses" reporters were told by rather uncommunicative gentlemen in the offices of the Convention Hall that it officially is known as "The Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society." Joseph F. Rutherford, a former New York magistrate, is its president.

The society boasts no press agent and is devoted to spreading Judge Rutherford's doctrines by way of radio and traveling loud speakers which send forth his words by way of "electrical transcription," or phonograph records.

Members believe, among other things, that all history is already written in the Bible and that whatever happens is predicted therein. Careful study of the Bible and of Judge Rutherford's tracts, which are innumerable, they say, will reveal that the United States Government is about to be plunged in the greatest debacle the world has ever known. So will all other governments.

Then, when corrupt governments have toppled, Jesus Christ will come back in person to save the world. All will be brothers then, and there will be no more misery, poverty or exploitation.

Man Who Planned to Let Spider Kill Him Is Dying of Narcotics

Nurse Reveals She Gave Big Dose of Drugs to Patient by Mistake.

By the Associated Press.

Worcester, Mass., June 2. — The fantastic Black Widow spider suicide attempt of Stephen Liarsky, 26, took a strange turn tonight with a statement of police and physicians that he was dying of an overdose of narcotics and not of a spider bite.

William P. Finneran, superintendent of detectives, announced that Rose Castagnaro, 21, of Westerly, R. I., a student nurse at a hospital, had told him she unwittingly supplied 125 tablets of the drug, a sleeping powder, to Liarsky when she visited him Thursday.

Coincidentally, doctors in charge of the case said their diagnosis showed Liarsky was dying of the narcotic and not from the virus of the Black Wiwod spider found in his room when he was discovered unconscious yesterday.

Notes found in the room indicated that Liarsky had permitted the spider to bite him in a suicide attempt.

Dr. George A. MacIver, superintendent of the hospital, said an investigation would be made concerning the tablets.

Dr. Arthur Thibodeau said he found marks on the man's chest and hands which might have been spider bites, but that the usual effects of spider bites had not made an appearance, although there were poison symptoms.

The spider, large bodied and with eight long legs, was found in a small box beside Liarsky's bed. The box also contained a postal card bearing the printed information that there was no known cure for one bitten.

Liarsky, a restaurant cook who had wandered throughout the United States, Canada and Alaska, returned to Worcester several days ago after visiting in Keene, N. H. The spider, which came from Los Angeles, Calif., by mail, arrived in Worcester Wednesday after being forwarded from Keene, N. H., by a friend.

Child Explorer Sees World on Street Car

Little America doesn't mean a thing to Bobby Clay, 2½ years old—but he has that exploratory spirit.

Bob, who lives at 1615 Kenyon street northwest, was footloose Saturday afternoon. He wandered down to Mount Pleasant street and boarded a car for downtown.

He was not discovered until the car reached the other end of the line. Bobby liked the car and didn't get off.

Wondering, the conductor said, "Where do you want to go, son?"

Bob answered, "home." To the question, "where is home?" he replied with a vague sweep of the hand that took in the entire city.

His father, M. C. Clay, already had reported him missing, so when the boy was taken to Tenth Precinct Station father and son quickly were reunited.

Youth Is Drowned in Potomac Trying to Save Brother's Life

A desperate attempt to save his brother from drowning in the treacherous currents of the Potomac River near Chain Bridge resulted yesterday in the death of Harry Somers, 23, a student fingerprint classifier in the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice. The brother was saved by others.

Harry and his brother, Saul, 30, who came from Brooklyn to spend a few days in Washington, were thrown into the river when their canoe was caught in the current and overturned.

Saul, who is unable to swim, grabbed a cross-piece of the canoe and kept afloat until two canoeists came along and brought him to the District side.

"Harry started for the Virginia shore. He is able to swim. He evidently saw me clinging to the canoe and started back to save me. I did not see him drown," Saul said.

Other witnesses said that Harry had almost reached the Virginia side when he turned and saw his brother trying to keep afloat with the aid of the canoe. He started to swim back to the canoe and became exhausted. He disappeared before aid could reach him.

Harry came to Washington two months ago from Brooklyn to begin work at the Department of Justice. He lived at 1801 Kenyon street northwest. His body was recovered by R. C. Ault, of the Harbor Precinct.

Missing School Girl Is Found in New York

Yonkers, N. Y., June 2 (AP).—Nervous and distraught, Marion Ruth Nesbit, 19, was brought home today by her father and Yonkers police after a Manhattan rooming house keeper notified them she had been there since Thursday night.

LOST FAT
Fooled Gossipers

Mrs. J. R. McCausland, of Pittsburgh, writes: "I took off 8 lbs. in two weeks with Kruschen. I ate as usual and feel fine." You, too, can safely reduce as Mrs. McCausland did if you'll only have a mind of your own. Pay no attention to gossipers who wouldn't want to see you the slender woman you can be if you'll only take a half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a cup of hot water every morning (tastes fine with juice of half lemon added).

Kruschen is SAFE—it's a health treatment and when your body abounds with Kruschen fitness—excess fat leaves. Jar lasts 4 weeks and costs but a trifle—any drugstore.—Adv.

Hurleys Luncheon Hosts At Estate Near Leesburg

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The luncheon given Saturday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley at their estate, Belmont Plantation, near Leesburg, Va., was one of the delightful events of the early summer. Guests were invited at 1 o'clock for a buffet luncheon in the magnificent old house, built many years ago by Ludlow Lee. The place was originally a fine old brick manor house, with brick slave quarters on either side, and a later owner joined the house and the slave quarters making one long rambling mansion. Still later another addition was made at the rear of the house and now it is one of the most beautiful places in nearby Virginia, high on a hill, among handsome trees and looking out to fields and hills and beyond to the Blue Ridge Mountains.

There was a horse show yesterday, held on the Hurley estate, and the guests were invited to attend this after a delicious buffet luncheon which followed the mint juleps. Most of the guests motored from Washington, arriving by twos and threes. They sat on the terraces, in the drawing rooms in groups, and many gathered around the table in the dining room to be as near as possible to the Virginia ham and other delightful dishes prepared for the luncheon. Mrs. Bowler Hull, wearing a summer frock of turquoise blue crepe and a soft white hat, was accompanied by Mr. Oscar Sutro, who is spending some time in Washington. Another group included the Ambassador of Germany, Dr. Hans Luther, with Senator and Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenburg, Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, wife of Senator Lewis, and Mr. and Mrs. William P. MacCracken, with the latter's mother, Mrs. Simeon T. Lewis. Mrs. Charles L. McNary, wife of Senator McNary, left almost immediately after lunch, while the others wandered down the hill to watch the afternoon events of the Leesburg Horse Show. There they mingled with the crowd which had drawn their motors up to the show ring, and cheered lustily as Mrs. Hurley's mount was awarded a blue ribbon and a handsome silver trophy.

Daughter Home From School.

Mrs. Hurley accompanied her guests to the show, while Mr. Hurley remained at the house to receive and entertain late arrivals. The hostess wore a sports frock of navy blue and white striped satin and a large navy blue straw hat. Young Miss Patsy Hurley, eldest of their daughters, was home from Madeira School for the day, and showed great interest in the show, as did the other daughters of the family, young Ruth, and the baby, who has grown, since the Hurleys moved from Washington, into a winsome miss, a blonde and blue-eyed 4-year-old.

Others present were Mrs. George H. Dern, wife of the Secretary of War, and her daughter, Mrs. Harry Baxter, the latter in a sports frock of dark red trimmed with light blue buttons and belt. Her hat was a Panama banded in the red. Also Mr. and Mrs. Armstead Peter, Mr. Ralph Snowden Hill, Mrs. Sidney Cloman, with her niece, Mrs. Campbell Pritchett, and her young son, who arrived late because they had been to the graduation of the boy from St. Alban's School; Mr. Frank Packard, Representative and Mrs. John Dockweiler, Mrs. George R. Holmes, Mr. Clarence Hewes, and Mrs. Harry O. Penick, of New Orleans, who is visiting in Washington.

Other Washingtonians seen at the show were Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Marston, Mr. Phil Campbell, who has taken a home for the summer near Leesburg, and his daughter, Mrs. Burdette Wright. Mr. and Mrs. Wright have been living in Buffalo for the last year, and Mrs. Wright with their three children will spend the summer months with Mr. and Mrs. Campbell in Virginia. Mr. Wright will join them when business permits. Mr. Joseph Cotter was at the show to see his daughter, Miss Margaret Cotter, carry off numerous trophies.

Linger on Terrace.

Returning to the house in the late afternoon, many of the guests lingered on the terrace which overlooks the horse show grounds. There were the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. Michael MacWhite, Representative and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mr. Hurley and several others deep in a discussion of politics, with the Mayor of Leesburg, Mr. Harrison. It was cool and the guests stayed to sip mint juleps, as others gathered from the show to say goodby to the hosts. Mrs. Hamilton Lewis was prevailed upon to read several palms before she left with the others for Washington.

Burnproof Oil Bronzes Skin, Repels Insects

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IT'S HERE at last! A new sunburn oil that does more than give the skin that pagan bronze!

What else, you might ask, could a sun oil do? Well here's what: This one repels mosquitoes, flies, and other insects as it does the harmful actinic sun rays.

You know what a boon that is! Surely you've given yourself a good oil rub down, and sprawled on the beach for a nice sun bath when all at once hordes of insects choose you to hover around. No danger of that now, with this little miracle worker. You can sprawl to your hearts content and enjoy strictest privacy from these annoying little buzzing bands.

And while you sprawl what a perfect tanning you're in for! Don't be afraid to risk it. You won't have to worry about being burnt black or red. You'll find your tan is a mellow, golden brown with a glistening "Indian" look that's so fashionable.

The creator of this new sun oil has been working on the knotty problem of finding some way to combine the ingredients which drives insects away with an intriguing fragrance, and a burnproof oil. At first the task she set for herself seemed virtually impossible but she kept plugging away. Success at last, and here's the product, the smoothest, neatest little beach accessory you can imagine.

Don't fail to take advantage of it to protect yourself from those vicious infra-red rays. And don't bother about the price. It's only 60 cents!

Nifty Manicure Sets.

If there's anything that's tempting it's a nifty little manicure set. If there's anything that's irresistible it's one that's been reduced to the ranks of real bargains.

You'll find just such a one in the toilet goods department of a downtown store. Smart, convenient, and compact! To see it will set you brimful of adjectives.

It's a little leather octagon-shaped kit containing a jar of hand cream, a polish and polish remover, and an oil that's fine for removing cuticle. Fastened to the top is a nail file, orange stick, and emory board. Although they are tucked away inside, there's still ample space for your cotton and the different shades of polish you like to keep on hand.

One of the nicest things about the kit is its adaptability to traveling. You can pack it in your suitcase without the slightest fear you'll find a variety of this and that spilled over your new wardrobe.

Or, if you're going away for the week end, you can carry it with you right in your hand. It's so attractive looking it would pass for a purse!

Once this kit sold for $1. Now, for a limited time only, it will be 79 cents.

Saving in Face Powder.

Twenty-five cents is not to be snooted at, and neither is a good face powder. Here's how you can buy a powder par excellence and save that 25 cents:

Drop by a downtown store and hunt for an unusually attractive powder display. There'll be four shades, with such intriguing names as "Revelry," "Nude," "Castilian," and "Shadow." There are little containers open for you to try. Just smooth a bit on. It's so soft and fine that it will literally cling to your skin and help obscure large pores and blemishes. Now if you wish to test some before you buy a large box you may purchase a sample size for only 25 cents. If you find it satisfactory—and there's no doubt about that—you may bring back the top to your sample pack and buy a large box at a discount of 25 cents. That's fair enough, isn't it? And you're getting a mighty fine thing!

Facial Accessories.

The newest in facial accessories to arrive in local shops is an egg-shaped complexion brush for whisking grime, dust and sooty deposits off the skin and out of the pores.

The brush is tapered at one end for easy manipulation. It fits the hand perfectly so you can obtain an easy grasp and need put forth no undue pressure for results.

Genuine boar bristles are scientifically set in compact groups to create points of contact and friction to insure a thorough complexion clean-up. These bristles are rounded at the ends so that there will be no danger of jagged points to stab and irritate even the most sensitive skins.

The plastic backs of the brushes are in vivid colors of tomato red, lemon yellow, fresh green, and onyx white. A transparent celluloid guard protects the bristles from dust and dirt in handling.

Brushing Hair Waves.

Query: Will brushing the hair tend to take the wave out? I have a new permanent and hesitate to brush it as much as I'd like.

LOIS.

Answer: Brushing is fine for the hair, the scalp and the permanent! Have you tried the brushes especially arranged for brushing a wave in?

Answer to Millay.

SISTER OF BEAUTY, cousin of delight,
Whose voice was music when our day began,
Let not the closing shutters of the night
Hide from your eyes the little lamp of man.
Let not the evening with her drowsier air
Make slow your heart or fasten on your breath:
Leave autumn to the cricket, to the hare
The smell of winter and the dread of death.
Man is not only treasure to the mole,
Nor is the tomb his only resting place.
Beauty has still an answer to the soul,
Which in the empty heaven of our times,
Regardless sings, and ever singing climbs.

How oft Columbus, dreaming of Cathay,
In the night's shadow, lost upon the sea,
Doubting the stars, and fearful of the day,
Wept in the cabin of the Saint Marie.
All was uncertain then, and only he Leaned on his sails and fed them to the spray,
Spreading the waves before him at his knee,
Drawing the winds behind him on his way.
And shall we then who steer a sturdier bark
Across obedient seas from pole to pole,
Or climb the sky on errands like the lark,
And crying, "All ahead is death and dark,"
Miss the remoter heavens of the soul?

The Navajo Blanket.

I WILL TAKE the sheep's wool for my spinning,
The ewe sheep that has walked in pollen,
And I will wind it slowly on my spindle.
My mother's mother gathered soft wild cotton,
But I the wool long grown among the flowers.
And I shall weave it on my loom of saplings,
And pound it with my batten from the scrub oak.
The mountains and the plains will yield me colors.
As they have yielded to my mother's mother
Past the time the ancients tell or I remember.
Out of the blue clay will I take my turquoise,
My black from sumac, the ochre and the pinion,
Yellow from the goldenrod and dock weed,
And from the rabbit bush that sweeps the plain,
From twigs of juniper will come my scarlet.
Mahogany that grows upon the mountain

The mountain and the plain will yield me color.
Father Sky and Mother Earth give patterns for any blanket,
My fingers move the shuttle, always leaving
A tiny hole in honor of the Spider,
The ancient hidden woman of our people,
Who past the time of all remembering
Proclaimed the art of weaving among women.

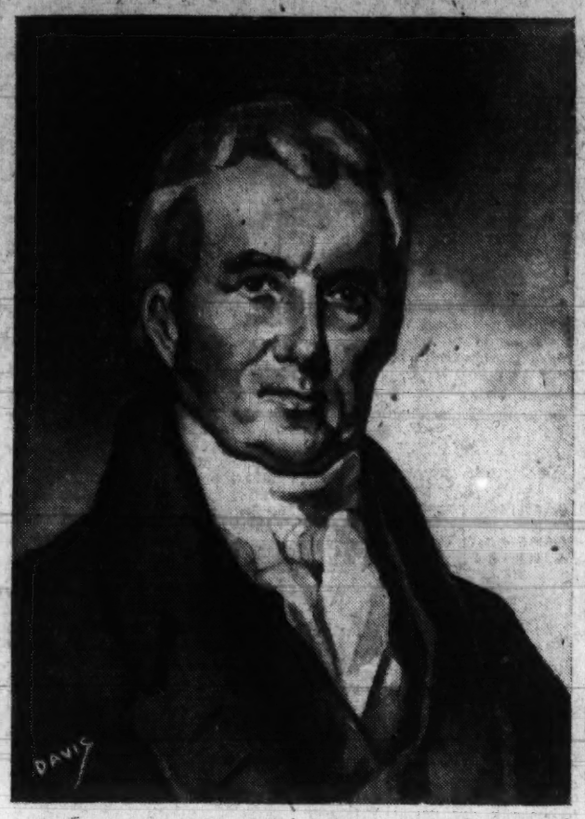
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

John Marshall—Mary Ambler.



After his marriage to 17-year-old Mary Ambler, belle of Yorktown, Va., John Marshall, young lawyer and Revolutionary War captain, had only one guinea in his pocket. The two founded a humble home in Richmond, where Marshall, inspired by his wife's devotion, developed a legal career that led him to the Supreme Court and to immortal fame as a jurist.

William and Mary Boy Wrote Belle's Name in Textbook.

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

"MARY AMBLER," wrote a tall lad on the fly-leaf of a text book which he was using at old William and Mary College, in Williamsburg, preparing himself for his destiny as one of the greatest legal luminaries of the nation. Thus fondly in the way of lovers, did John Marshall, Revolutionary patriot, seasoned in the military field, put down the beloved name of the Virginia belle who had captivated his young fancy. The Revolution was nearly over and he had time to think of the delights of romance.

At this particular time, when the eyes of the country are fixed on the mighty powers of the nine venerable men who occupy the grandeur of the new Supreme Court building romance seems an attribute not to be sought for in the judicial make-up. But Supreme Court justices are human beings and their life stories parallel those of other men.

No doubt Chief Justice John Marshall, sitting in solitary grandeur in that eminent post, often let his fancy stray back to the old days in Williamsburg when Mary Ambler was the theme of his thoughts and his songs.

Ideal Setting for Love.

Until he had met Mary Ambler romance had passed by John Marshall. Now he was getting a delayed education in the law and in romance as well. The setting was an ideal one for such occupations. In the first place, the ancient college, even in that day, with its traditions of the great who had gone through its portals, had inspiration for all who sought learning there. Probably since boyhood in the pioneer home of his parents, Thomas and Mary Randolph Keith Marshall, young John had cherished the hope that some day he might find the path open which should lead to William and Mary College.

The search for this path had been delayed by the Revolution itself. When Thomas Marshall took his hunting rifle and hunting knife and put them in the hands of his first born son, John Marshall, the chief-justice-to-be, at the opening of the Revolution, the 19-year-old boy put aside for the nonce all thought of William and Mary for the excitements of a military career.

It was as Capt. John Marshall of the Eleventh Virginia Regiment, waiting for his new command and putting in the time of his enforced absence from the field in legal study at Williamsburg that he met first the lovely Mary Ambler, belle of the little town of Yorktown not far distant from the college center.

Living in Poverty.

From being one of the wealthiest men in the vicinity the war had ruined Mary's father, Jacquelin Ambler, and when John Marshall met Mary for the first time they were living humbly. But poverty could not alter the charm of this cultured family, the mother being that same Rebecca Burwell who had been the love of Thomas Jefferson's youth "his Belinda" and who had rejected him to marry Jacquelin Ambler. The beautiful Ambler girls were the toast of the community and at the Yorktown ball for the visiting colonial officers they were sought on all sides. The fame of Capt. John Marshall had reached the little town and all the belles were aflutter with speculation as to which maiden might win his attention. Pretty Mary Ambler, then only 14 years of age, electrified her older sisters by declaring she was going to the ball "and was resolved to set her cap at him and eclipse them all."

Capt. Marshall's rustic appearance dismayed the older girls when the great night of the ball came. Not so little Mary. With common sense beyond her years she saw the shadow of the future greatness of the man behind the awkwardness of the youth.

Served as Inspiration.

It was the thought of Mary Ambler that cheered John Marshall on in his law course under good George Wythe at William and Mary where he completed his legal education in six weeks, it is said, and later passed his bar examinations with flying colors. By this time he had a thorough understanding with Mary Ambler and her family and was to marry her after the war was over and she a little older and he with a definite place in civil life.

Time passed, the Revolution was over, and John Marshall's law practice grew in Richmond, where Mary Ambler was now living. When elected to the Legislature, his pleas for an early marriage won the father's consent. "On January 3, 1783," Marshall wrote in his autobiography, "I intermarried with Mary Willis Ambler, the second daughter of Mr. Jacquelin Ambler, then Treasurer of Virginia, who was the third son of Mr. Richard Ambler, a gentleman who had migrated from England, and settled at Yorktown in Virginia."

Mary Ambler was but 17 years old. "After the bridegroom had paid the minister his fee," records Beveridge, "he had but one solitary guinea left."

Their first home was a tiny one-story affair of wood, with only two rooms in it. But love was there, they had close and dear friends, and little by little John Marshall was gaining a real place on the legal ladder of fame. Mary brought him material luck, but soon after her marriage she became an invalid receiving from him a devotion and care. A sister wrote: "Her illness only served to increase his care and tenderness. He is always and under every circumstance an enthusiast in love."

Cherished Locket.

John Marshall's respect for woman is a tradition in Richmond even to this day. It is based on this tenderness he displayed for an ill wife. She lived, bore him children and directed their up-bringing and education until Christmas Day, 1831. The day before she placed about his neck a locket with a wisp of her hair in it. To the day of his death he wore this memento, never parting with it, night or day.

Marshall wrote of this sad event which made Christmas for him thereafter "the anniversary of the keenest affliction which humanity can sustain," as follows: "On the twenty-fifth of December, 1831, it was the will of Heaven to take to itself the companion who had sweetened the choicest part of my life, had rendered toil a pleasure, had partaken of all my feelings, and was enthroned in the innermost recess of my heart. Never can I cease to feel the loss and to deplore it. Grief for her is too sacred ever to be profaned on this day, which shall be, during my existence, marked by a recollection of her virtues.

"I have lost her, and with her have lost the solace of my life! Yet she remains still the companion of my retired hours, still occupies my inmost bosom. When alone and unemployed, my mind still recurs to her."

Marshall survived his wife only three and a half years, dying on July 6, 1835, in Philadelphia. By his own direction the last thing taken from his body after he died was the locket his wife had hung about his neck on the eve of her own death.

What TODAY Means

"GEMINI."

IF JUNE 3 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. and from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m.

This day should be auspicious for the advancing of social and business aspirations. Any suggestions that may be made to you June 3, by one interested in your future, should not be lightly cast aside, but carefully considered. It will be a mistake to display any lack of consideration should a friend come to you seeking your sympathy. Business men will be unwise to take an unfair advantage in any transaction that might develop on this date, as consequent losses through lack of faith in their fair dealing are likely to more than offset any temporary gain made.

If a woman, and June 3 is your birthday, you are quick to grasp essential facts. Be careful this does not cause you to get into the the habit of being satisfied with having a superficial, instead of a thorough knowledge of worthwhile subjects. You may be inclined to treat friendship too lightly. You should have a strongly developed sense of intuition, which, if you permit yourself to be guided by it, should prove a valuable asset. You should do well financially if you put the right amount of enthusiasm into the work of a restaurant, specialty shop, or selling some needed commodity. An early marriage should turn out well.

If a man, and June 3 is your natal day, your mental alertness should save you from the pitfalls that beset the path of the average businessman. You should be an excellent judge of human nature, and this will help you to succeed. Marriage is the logical thing for you, and it should be instrumental in your securing a great deal of happiness. Theology, politics, law, dentistry, medicine, engineering, or selling specialized lines, may have the best money-making possibilities for you.

Try Blackberry Flummery: It's an Old-Fashioned Pudding

Recipe, if There Ever Was a Hard and Fast One, Lost in Shuffle.

Today's Dinner Menu.

Consomme with saltines
Spanish omelet
Baked potatoes on the half shell
Creamed onions
Sliced cucumbers
Whole wheat bread and butter
Blackberry roll with hard sauce
Coffee Milk for children

By Dorothea Duncan.

REMEMBER the good old days when grandmother served her own special blackberry flummery topped with delicious thick cream? Mention flummery in this day and age and you will draw a blank stare. The recipe seems to have been lost in the shuffle. Perhaps it wasn't a definite recipe anyhow; so many of those old dishes were made by the pinch of this and teacupful of that method.

Flummery is really a pudding and it may be thickened with arrowroot or cornstarch as you prefer. First, wash and hull the fresh blackberries. Sweeten them to taste and stew them in their own juice over a low flame. Enough water to cover the bottom of the saucepan may be added to prevent the berries from sticking or burning. When the berries have simmered until tender, remove them from the flame and run them through a strainer, pressing out all the juice. Then when the juice is no longer hot, stir in enough cornstarch, mixed to a smooth paste with a little cold water, to thicken the mixture to pudding consistency. Cook the mixture over boiling water, stirring frequently until the cornstarch is thoroughly cooked, about 30 minutes, and the mixture is clear. Serve ice cold with plain cream.

Blackberry Pudding

2 eggs
½ pint milk
1-3 cup sugar
1 tablespoon melted butter
1 teaspoon baking powder
1-3 teaspoon salt
2 cups flour
2 cups berries

Sift together 1¾ cups flour, the sugar and salt, and stir in the milk gradually. Add melted butter and baking powder, and lastly, fold in the berries, which have been rubbed over the remaining flour. Grease a one-pound coffee tin and put a round of greased paper in the bottom of it; pour the pudding into the tin and set in a kettle of boiling water to steam 1½ hours. Serve with hard sauce.

Blackberry Roll.

1½ quarts blackberries
1 tablespoon butter
1 cup white sugar
Biscuit dough
½ cup brown sugar

Roll out biscuit dough (see recipe below) ½ inch thick and strew with the berries which have been set to soak in the white and brown sugar. Dot with butter. Fold the dough over on each side so that the berries will not escape, and roll up. Put in a well buttered pan, surrounded by some of the sugar-soaked blackberries and bake in hot oven ½ hour, basting twice with the escaping juice. Serve with hard sauce while still warm, and in the pan in which baked.

Biscuit Dough.

2½ cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ cup butter and lard mixed
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk

Sift the dry ingredients together; mix in the shortening and then the milk, working the dough as little as possible. Roll out dough as directed above.

"Mr. X." Disappointed in Reply Given Last Monday, Furnishes More Concise Description of His Qualifications and Environment.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I must admit I was disappointed in your reply to my letter printed last Monday, although I may have been guilty of not being explicit enough in describing the circumstances of my case. But since I gave you a fairly good perspective on my personality and find myself accused of the heinous crime of Narcissism, I think it now behooves me to answer some of your questions specifically. I shall attempt to be very concise.

* * * *

In the first place I am located in a small rural community, very isolated and apart from the maddening crowd, where there is absolutely no chance of my being employed. I am solely dependent upon parental support—much to my dislike—and since I have no "political pull" I have been unable to get in on the dispensing of the plums of patronage.

* * * *

I live among a group of people whose ideas, customs and habits are different from mine and naturally we have little in common. Ergo, I am forced to seek refuge within the printed page for recreation and must say I feel keenly the lack of that psychological necessity: Congeniality.

* * * *

While at college I was forced to study long and hard to get by the rigid examinations and hence never had opportunity to develop my acquaintanceship with those of the fair sex. What little spare time I had I spent in "bull sessions" with my companions and I hold those experiences to be among the most enjoyable I have ever had.

Now as to what I can do or would do. I would be willing to do anything within the sphere of my capabilities: private tutoring, revising manuscripts, work involving the use of French or Latin languages, work involving the use of trigonometry (especially navigation); or even being a butler-chauffeur.

* * * *

As regards being preoccupied with myself: I have little else to do. It is either a case of doing that or worrying about lack of employment. Which of the two is the better? Furthermore, it is impossible for me to study anyone other than myself subjectively. And to study personalities objectively often leads to false conclusions for "things are generally not what they seem." At least I believe I have been practical enough to observe that. Thanking you for any advice, I am, yours truly, MR. X.

DEAR MR. X.: Because you "live among a group of people whose ideas, customs and habits are different" from yours, you are forced (you say) "to seek refuge within the printed page for recreation . . . and feel keenly the lack of that psychological necessity: Congeniality."

You have heard the old saying: "When in Rome, do as the Romans do." It has it's practical social application. Havelock Ellis, the English psychologist and philosopher, has said, in effect, that the degree of a man's civilization is proved by the degree of his adaptability to environment.

* * * *

Commentators on and beneficiaries of college education seem to be agreed, moreover, that one of the major purposes of higher education—in fact, of all group education, beginning with nursery school and kindergarten classes—is the socialization of the individual. That is, to inculcate into him, by example, precept and experience, a mastery of the technique of adjusting himself adequately to any environment and to all persons.

* * * *

To feel keenly the need for companionship, yet to retreat "within the orinted page to find it," is simply a sluggard's way of meeting the situation. Since these people fail to meet you on your terms, why not make an active effort to meet them on their ground? In other words, prove your possession of that degree of civilization which you claim by implication. Work toward building a vital, reciprocal social relationship with your neighbors. Stop thinking of yourself as having "little in common" with them. If that is true, it may be, in a measure, your fault. They are wrestling with the realities of their environment, while you are drugged in dreams. That is not living; it is an evasive drifting.

* * * *

I am inclined to think shyness and self-consciousness (subversive forms of egoism) rather than long hours of hard study and the delights of masculine bull sessions stood in the way of your making worthwhile friendships with women at college. Egoistic persons in self-defense usually conjure an image of themselves as unique, distinctively different from and indefinably superior to the crowd. It's the frightened, unenlightened human's way of sticking his head in the sand, while the social procession passes him by.

Which is better: to dwell in a subjective world of self, or to worry about lack of employment? Either is a futile occupation, leading nowhere. You must advertise and actively promote the sale of your wares, if you expect the world to recognize and avail itself of them. Have you tried advertising your qualifications and willingness to work in the Sunday newspapers of the leading cities in Maryland and Virginia?

In your first letter you asked for some suggestion "for alleviating loneliness and utilizing leisure." Had you thought of organizing afternoon or evening classes of study, giving your services as teacher or lecturer free, if none are able to pay? Perhaps you could institute a neighborhood club for discussion of social questions pertinent to these times, or for developing an appreciation of that classical music of which you are so fond, or for studying literature and poetry, for which you have a "flair."

* * * *

It would be better to spade gardens, mow lawns, trim hedges, or even head hiking expeditions of small boys, than to sit and morbidly brood on self. M. H.

Music Lessons Should Start At Early Age

A CHILD is never too young to learn music. From the time he is able to walk and talk he should be given some sort of musical instruction. Two is a good age for him to start learning rhythms as unconsciously and effortlessly as he does words, says an article in the current issue of the National Parent-Teacher Magazine.

The parents, even if they are not essentially musical, can provide a valuable musical background for their children, according to the article. Simple melodies are sufficient for the clapping of little hands, the marching or hopping of little feet. The child's musuclar coordination will probably be poor at first, but gradually he will develop a feeling for rhythm which will be a foundation for all his musical experience.

For the parents who can't pick out the simplest melodies on the piano there are finger games which they may teach their children. "Patty Cake," "This Little Pig Went to Market" and similar rhymes are lots of fun with musical settings. Then there are homemade musical devices such as a water glass and spoon or small box filled with pebbles and fastened tightly.

The water glass tapped lightly with a spoon makes a musical sound. The box filled with pebbles is a substitute for a tambourine. The small child also gets a good deal of satisfaction out of being able to beat a drum in time to the phonograph, radio, or piano as his older brothers and sisters march around the room.

But just what does all this do for the child? It aids him in acquiring poise, most sought after necessity in modern life, and gives him a feeling for rhythm, the article continues.

The child who can march in perfect time or express the mood of the music in play or dance is developing splendid physical coordination.

Church Liberty In U.S. Credited To Virginian

Despite the present-day controversy as to whether Roger Williams, founder of Rhode Island, the tercentenary of which is being celebrated this year, was a "full-fledged Baptist," the idea of complete religious freedom of thought and toleration which he implanted in the new colony of Providence Plantations, was drawn from a line of Baptist writers in England, who were preaching that doctrine, declared Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, of London, executive secretary of the Baptist World Alliance, in his sermon at the First Baptist Church yesterday morning on "The Contemporary Activities of the Holy Spirit."

Speaking of the growth of Baptist thought and work throughout the world, particularly during the past century, in which time this denomination has multiplied 23 times, Dr. Rushbrooke mentioned the fact that the influence of Virginia Baptists was mainly responsible for the broad principle of religious freedom incorporated in the Constitution of the United States.

Russia's Status Deplored.

He deplored the present religious condition in Russia, declaring that its organization has been shattered under the present regime. Then speaking particularly of Baptist effort in that country, he stated that of those who had been connected with its organized work, there was only one young man who was not in prison or exile.

He said he saw no evidence of change on the part of the Soviet government whose purpose "is to eradicate religion not only from the lives, but from the souls of men."

"Those who come through the present fire of persecution there," he added, "may have a great part some day in helping to build up the new Russia."

Dr. Rushbrooke, whose official position has taken him to all parts of the world, spoke of continental Europe where a century ago, he said, there was not a single Baptist Church, but where today there are hundreds of thousands of members, Albania being the only country of Europe in which there are no Baptists.

He told of the start of the work by Oncken in Germany just 100 years ago and of the spread from there to other countries in Europe.

"The two pillars at the door of the Baptist tabernacle," he said, "are evangelism and liberty; a passion for winning souls to Christianity and the principle of every man's right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience."

The Game of Life

By Priscilla Wayne.

IT CAME to Ellen's startled ears that the voice which answered her telephone call could not possibly be the placid voice of Mary Tuttle.

"Yes," the voice said. "Yes, this is the office of Dale & Langhan, Mr. Dale isn't here. May I tell him who called?"

And Ellen recognized that voice—if she did not hear it for a dozen years, she would recognize the purring, too-soft quality of Marjorie Hutton's voice.

"Tell him," Ellen said in sudden jealous frenzy, "tell him that Mrs. Michael Dale called."

"Just a minute, Mr. Dale. Hold the phone, please." She seemed to have gone away from the telephone for a minute or two. Ellen wondered if Michael could be there and that Marjorie's first answer had been to avoid calling him.

Asked to See Her.

"Hello," Marjorie said at last. "I wonder if I can see you? Right away? I have a message for you."

Without hesitation Ellen answered, "Of course. Is anything wrong?"

"Where are you?" Marjorie asked.

"There are private booths there," Marjorie said. "Wait where you are. I'll be there in ten minutes."

Ellen put the receiver back on its hook, stood there at the booth tapping her foot impatiently. She wondered what Marjorie Hutton could be up to.

Meeting Was Prompt.

But there was one thing certain, she told herself. It was one woman against another. Having made up her mind to talk to Michael, to win him back, Ellen was determined that nothing—not even Marjorie—should interfere.

Marjorie came—in 20 minutes—just as Ellen was making up her mind not to wait any longer.

She opened the store door insolently. Stepped inside. She was wearing a lovely new coat and a cunning cocked hat that set off her blond prettiness to perfection.

She said, "Hello," as nonchalantly as though she had left Ellen only a few minutes before. "Come on back. Let's have something to eat. It's easier to talk when there's a table between us."

"Maybe there isn't much we need say," Ellen ventured.

Ellen Was Uneasy.

"Maybe not, but I reckon I can tell you a few things you will want to hear—I mean that at least you ought to hear."

"Oh, yes," Ellen said and followed Marjorie, feeling considerably less at ease than she had felt only a few minutes before.

"I'll have an olive and nut sandwich," Marjorie said without reference to the menu, "and a cup of hot chocolate."

"I'll have the same," Ellen said, and the waiter hurried away.

"It's been a long time since I saw you, Ellen." Marjorie played with her purse.

"Yes." Ellen was trying desperately to fathom the other girl's game.

"You've changed," Marjorie declared briefly.

Ellen nodded. "So have you."

"I'm happy," Marjorie said.

"And you infer that I'm not?" Ellen parried. "But pleaes don't stall, Marjorie. Let's just get down to brass tacks. Why did you want me to wait for you here?"

Wanted Privacy.

"I wanted to talk to you, Ellen."

"About what?"

"About Michael."

"All right, what about him?" Ellen was trying desperately to prove that she could be as casual as Marjorie.

"Wait a minute," Marjorie said, meaning that they should wait for privacy.

The waiter set iced water and napkins before them. Moved quietly away. Ellen took a drink. Set the water glass down slowly. "Now what do you mean? Why did you ask me to meet you here, and what is it you have to say about Michael?"

"Just this. You intend to be direct about it. All right. I can be, too. When are you going to divorce Michael?"

Ellen's voice was level and calm. "I might answer that question if I considered the answer any of your business."

A Bad Start.

Marjorie pondered that one. She was glad the waiter came just then with their order. The start had been a bad one. She decided to try another tack.

"No need getting angry, Ellen, I suppose that the two of us, next to Mike's mother, are the two women who love him most of any persons in the world."

Ellen sipped her hot chocolate with nonchalant ease. Marjorie was excited. Her hand trembled. Ellen knew that so far Marjorie was losing in the verbal combat. "Perhaps you're right, Marjorie."

"Of course I'm right. Then isn't it common sense to talk things over? Don't you think you owe Mike something, Ellen?"

"Owe Mike something? I don't understand."

Marjorie's eyes flashed. "Well, then, I'll tell you. You married him and you tricked him. You knew that Michael thought he was marrying a home making girl. You knew that was his ideal all along. You led him to believe you were that kind of a girl and after he'd married you——"

He Was Humiliated.

"After he married me, what?"

"You know without my telling. You humiliated him by going back to work, by paying your mother's bad debts, you persisted in your ambitions even if you broke his heart."

"I think," Ellen said slowly, "that you've said enough, Marjorie. What I have done is my own business, after all. I don't propose to discuss it with you."

"Wait a minute, Ellen. You've got to answer me. I love Mike Dale and he loves me. He wants his freedom. When are you going to give it to him?"

Ellen sat back. Marjorie's words bore the ring of truth. "If he wants his freedom, why doesn't he ask for it, Marjorie?"

A Frank Question.

And Marjorie Hutton looked Michael Dale's wife firmly in the eyes. "He doesn't like to ask you for it. You were hurt by the baby's death. So was Michael—bitterly hurt. You filed suit for divorce against him once. Why don't you do it again? Why don't you save him the embarrassment and yourself for that matter, of making him ask for it?"

Fear that Marjorie spoke the truth was flooding into Ellen's mind. "How did you know that I filed suit for divorce? The notice never came out in the papers."

"You forget that Mary Tuttle, down at Michael's office, is my cousin. She told me first, Michael told me later. He would have been glad to go through with it even then."

"I did not know Mary Tuttle is your cousin," Ellen said slowly. "That is how you happened to answer tonight."

"Yes. She's been on a vacation. I always have taken her place for her. I've been working there the last month."

"Michael was there when I called?"

Marjorie hesitated, almost as though she preferred not to answer that question.

But Ellen was insistent. "Michael was there when I called?"

"Yes. He did not want to talk to you. I asked him if he would. He said no. He asked me to tell you how he feels about it. We love each other, Ellen. Michael wants you to give him his freedom."

Ellen put on her gloves. Now her love story was over. The last chapter had been written. "Very well. I will do it. But I must have proof that he wants me to do it."

Marjorie leaned forward impulsively. "All right, Ellen. I'll give you that proof. Listen."

Solving a Playing Problem.

WHEN a player holds some such combination as K 10 3 of a suit in one hand and nothing but small cards in the other, he needn't worry about losing more than two tricks in that suit, provided he is not compelled to lead the suit. This statement can be substantiated to the satisfaction of any student who will take the trouble to deal out the cards, giving the remaining honors as he pleases to the two opposing sides.

It was an appreciation of this fact that permitted declarer in a recent duplicate game to be the only one to make his contract. The hand was:

South Dealer
Both sides vulnerable

	♠ K Q 6 ♡ K Q 5 4 3 ◇ K 8 2 ♣ 9 3
♠ 9 5 4 ♡ 8 ◇ 9 5 4 3 ♣ A 8 6 5 4	N W E S	♠ 8 3 ♡ A 7 6 2 ◇ Q J 10 6 ♣ Q J 2
	♠ A J 10 7 2 ♡ J 10 9 ◇ A 7 ♣ K 10 7

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	2♡	Pass
3♡	Pass	3♠	Pass
4♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

The bidding is accurate enough. South's Jack-Ten-nine of hearts is almost adequate support, and he must certainly find another bid in response to his partner's takeout. The raise of hearts is a better choice than the bidding of any number of notrump or a rebid of the spades. When South bid three hearts, North rightly bid three spades, and South's rebid to game is perfectly obvious.

The Play.

Most players on the bidding made an opening lead of a spade, and the ordinary line of attack, after winning the first spade in the closed hand, was to lead a heart and establish that suit before drawing trumps. This line of play proved a losing one, as East won with the Ace, returned the club Queen, and later was able to give his partner a ruff in hearts for the setting trick.

The safe line of play was to draw the adverse trumps and then establish the hearts. With the combination of clubs held, not enough leads could then be made to keep South from fulfilling his contract, and if the opponents could be held to one trick in the club suit, declarer would make five.

EXTENSION of the fingerprint system to include PWA, FERA, CCC workers and employes of other emergency agencies is urged by John Arthur Shaw, director, Veterans Preference League.

BAKER.

All civil service employes now have their fingerprints filed at the Department of Justice, but no such records of emergency personnel is kept, according to information received at the Department.

A file, however, is provided for persons not in the employ of the Government, who wish to submit their fingerprints to be kept for purposes of identification.

Shaw presents the follwing reasons for including emergency workers in the fingerprint system:

"(1) These organizations are handling great sums of money and their personnel, of necessity, must be chosen in more haste than is ordinarily the case in the filling of Government jobs. If they recorded the fingerprints of all personnel they could be reasonably sure of the fact that none of their personnel had previous criminal records. If one or more of their appointees had slight records and they desired to appoint them it would add to the morale of these men if they knew that their records were known and that they were not at the mercy of dishonest men who might threaten them with exposure unless the latter were granted some unfair favor.

(2) In case of an absconding official these agencies could be reasonably sure of his apprehension if his fingerprints were on file.

(3) In case of a major disaster in a CCC camp, or elsewhere, or in case one of the personnel, or more, should suffer amnesia, death, or mental or physical injury in a distant city, identification of the victim or victims would be facilitated by this system of identification."

YOU'LL LIKE THEIR MILDNESS TOO!

PETE DESJARDINS, winner of many U. S. and Olympic diving titles, says: "Divers and swimmers like a mild cigarette that won't get their wind or upset their nerves. That's why I prefer Camels—they never get my wind or jangle my nerves."

Read these reports from star athletes approving Camels

When athletes agree upon one cigarette, its mildness is placed beyond question. For they must be sure about mildness!

Pete Desjardins says: "Camels are so mild that I can smoke as many as I like and still keep my wind in perfect condition."

Pepper Martin, fleet-footed St. Louis Cardinal, says: "Camels are mild—don't cut down on my speed or wind." And Pepper is backed by Leo Sexton, Olympic shot-put record holder; Craig Wood, the golf star; Reggie McNamara, the "bike" racer; Susan Vilas, of swimming fame—to name only a few of the outstanding athletes who say they smoke Camels all they please, without disturbing their wind or nerves.

You'll find you can smoke Camels all you want! They are gentle on the throat. And athletes say that Camel's costlier tobaccos don't tire their taste—don't upset their nerves or get their "wind."

IT'S JUST AS IMPORTANT TO YOU to keep "in condition" as it is to any champion. Smoke Camels all you wish. Athletes say Camels never upset the nerves, never get the wind.

SO MILD! YOU CAN SMOKE ALL YOU WANT!

Tygart Dam To Give Jobs To 4,000 Men

Total Cost of Project in West Virginia to Be $12,000,000.

Flood Conditions Due to Be Relieved Through New Structure.

Work on the Tygart reservoir and dam on the Tygart River, 2 miles above Grafton, W. Va., financed by a PWA allotment of $10,000,000, will give employment this summer to at least 4,000 men.

That the project will provide employment to more than 1,000 men on the site and to approximately 3,000 more indirectly, was assured in a progress report made by the Corps of Engineers to Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes.

Already, nearly 1,000 men are at work on the project. Service bridges, railroad yards, diversion tunnels and cofferdams have been prepared so that the actual work of building the dam can be facilitated.

Objectives of Dam.

The two main objectives of the dam are navigation and flood control. Water from the dam will be used during the late summer and fall to maintain depths of 7 and 8 feet in the Monongahela River, and in the spring the Tygart project will eliminate floods from the Tygart Valley and alleviate flood conditions in the entire reach of the Monongahela Valley.

Pittsburgh will particularly benefit from the flood control. Since 1854, when flood records were first available, the great steel center has experienced 86 high waters which were above the flood stage, or an average of 1.07 floods a year. Analysis of floods in the area indicates that the Tygart River is one of the important contributing factors.

Total Cost $12,000,000.

Through the release of water in the dry season to aid navigation, the dam also will help control the high low-water acidity of the Monongahela River, due largely to pollution from mine drainage and manufacturing wastes. This acid is costly because of its corrosive action on the boilers and exposed iron and steel parts of boats, barges and navigation structures in the river. The alkaline reserves in the Tygart Dam, when released, are expected to neutralize it.

The dam will be built of concrete and will be of the gravity type. It will rise 15 feet above the river bed, will be 1,700 feet in length and will provide storage of 327,500 acre feet. Total cost of the dam is estimated at $12,000,000.

Commission Discusses Savage River Dam

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., June 2.—The Upper Potomac River Commission, created by the recent session of the Legislature to have supervision over the proposed Savage River Dam, held its first meeting yesterday. C. J. Bruce, city engineer for Cumberland, met with the board. The personnel consists of Owen E. Hitchins, Alegany County member; George Warnick, Garrett County member, and Mayor George W. Legge, chairman, appointed by Gov. Nice.

The members of the commission made plans to go to Baltimore early this week to consult with State authorities.

The Savage River dam has been approved tentatively by the Maryland Public Works Administration, and plans for the work will go forward as soon as Maryland receives the necessary funds, which are expected to be allotted from the Federal work relief funds.

The dam, which will be 155 feet high, will cost $1,250,000, and will give employment to several hundred persons for a year or more.

The proposed dam will be located on Savage River, near the present dam of the City of Piedmont, about 7 miles west of Piedmont, W. Va. Both the Piedmont and Westernport dams would be eliminated, but those communities would be assured of an ample supply of water.

The Celanese Corporation plans to double the size of its plant at Amcelle if the dam is constructed, it is announced. Expansion at present is limited by lack of water in dry seasons.

'Faith Cure' Pastor Offers Arm, But Rattlers Refuse to Bite

By the Associated Press.

St. Charles, Va., June 2.—The Rev. George Hensley, holiness revivalist, who has awed large crowds here by permitting poisonous snakes to strike his left hand in a demonstration of his "faith cure," handled three large rattlesnakes at services this morning at Ramsey, near here.

This time, however, the snakes refused to bite the Rev. Hensley or any of the other five persons who handled them. This the Rev. Hensley attributed to his prayers, citing Biblical passages to support his faith.

A crowd estimated at 1,000 was present as the Rev. Hensley opened the cage with his right hand, holding his already bitten left hand at his side. The revivalist took the three large snakes in his right hand, and after he had made his demonstration, five other persons took the rattlers in their hands and ran through the crowd, shouting and praying for such "miracles of faith."

The shouting became tremendous after the rattlers refused to bite, when they had seemed vicious while in the cage.

One of the snakes was 4½ feet long with 11 rattles and the other two were 3 feet long with 5 rattles each. They had been recently caught in the mountains of Kentucky.

Early in the morning Mrs. Klee reported that two 100-pound drums of oil were stolen, and while she was giving additional information on the robbery her home was entered again and insurance and income tax papers stolen from a safe.

J. A. Chaloner Is Laid to Rest Near Cismont

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., June 2.—John Armstrong Chaloner, member of a socially prominent and wealthy family, who for years was in the public eye as he fought successfully to regain in New York the status of a sane person, was buried late this afternoon in the cemetery adjoining historic Grace Episcopal Church, near Cismont.

Hundreds of neighbors filled the church to overflowing. The service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. Frances L. Robinson, who reminded his listeners that they were indebted to Chaloner for the present church structure, for it was he who had the foresight to insure the old building without knowledge of the vestry a few months before it was destroyed by fire in the winter of 1895.

"Chaloner," the minister said, "was the friend of every poor resident of the community and never refused to help the needy. This neighborhood will never forget him."

Present at the service were his brother, Lewis Stuyvesant Chalner, of New York, and two sisters, Mrs. John J. Chapman, of Barrytown, N. Y., and Mrs. Christopher Temple Emmett, of Stony Brook, Long Island.

His third sister, Mrs. Richard Aldrich, of Barrytown, who had visited Chaloner at University Hospital prior to his death yesterday, was detained at home by Mr. Aldrich's illness. The family was represented by their son, Richard Aldrich, jr., Chaloner's former wife, now Princess Troubestzkoy, was prevented from attending the funeral by illness, but her younger sister, Miss Landon Rives, occupied a seat in the rear of the church.

Honorary ballbearers were members of the vestry of the church, together with Dr. William G. Christian, of Barboursville, former professor of anatomy at the University of Virginia, and Chaloner's physician for many years; Dr. Oscar Swineford, jr., of University Hospital, and A. D. Payne, of Charlottesville.

Danville Expected To Drop PWA Bid

Loan for Power Plant May Be Delayed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., June 2.—The city council will hold a meeting early this week at which, it is believed, an agreement will be reached to withdraw the city's application for a $2,750,000 PWA grant and loan to finance the development of a new municipal power plant.

This is to be done, according to City Attorney A. M. Aiken, because public indorsement of the bond issue could not be expected when the terms on which the money would be loaned are less advantageous than terms covering the works allocation in the $4,800,000,000 bill.

Danville has been allotted the money sought at 4 per cent interest and with a 30 per cent grant. If the city had been given 3 per cent interest and 43 per cent grant, as now allowed under the works-relief bill, it would have saved Danville $1,250,000 during the life of the loan agreement.

VirginiaBody Seeks Speed On U.S. Work

Southside Corp. Will Hold First Meeting on Saturday.

Five Counties to Chose Their Directors This Week.

By the Associated Press.

Lawrenceville, Va., June 2.—Directors for five addition counties in the recently organized Southside Virginia, Inc., will be chosen this week in preparation for a meeting of the board at 2:30 p. m. Saturday.

The board will elect a president and make final plans for launching a program of varied activities by which the organization hopes to increase within its territory "both the material and cultural means for a more abundant life." Several well known Southside Virginians have been suggested for the presidency.

Mecklenburg, Brunswick, Nottoway, Dinwiddie and Sussex counties designated their directors at the organization meeting May 21. Other counties which will have their directors chosen in time for the meeting next Saturday are Lunenburg, Greensville, Halifax, Charlotte and Southampton.

It is expected that the organization will be limited to these counties, for the time being at least, in order the better to preserve a compact territory.

Preliminary inquiries already have been started into several Southside activities, especially that of making the organization available for speeding up action on public works and work relief projects that have been listed by the counties and localities. Another immediate undertaking will be a survey to determine what industries are practicable for local development.

By the Associated Press.

Wytheville, Va., June 2.—The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals will sit here in its summer term beginning Tuesday morning. The terms here usually last about two weeks and involve only one general decision day.

Several cases of unusual interest in Southwest Virginia are expected to be before the court in one stage or another, including the Henry F. and Bernace Bausell convictions for the slaying of T. Eugene Cornett, of near Rural Retreat, in January, 1934, and the contemplated appeal from a death sentence against Howard Delp, convicted of slaying Chief of Police Posey C. Martin at Galax a few months ago.

The Bausells were granted a writ of error and have been in jail about a year pending disposition of their appeal. Delp is in Roanoke Jail with only a few days left in which to act for a stay.

Ellison's Auto Is Discovered In Wooded Area

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., June 2.—The green-colored Ford coupe belonging to James M. Ellison, 57-year-old manager of historic Brandon on the James River, near Richmond, was found abandoned in a wooded section about 10 miles south of Christiansburg late this afternoon.

Ellison's body was found Friday on a roadside near the Goochland-Louisa County line near Richmond. Investigators have expressed belief he was the victim of a hitch-hiker who killed him and robbed him of a valuable diamond ring missing from his finger.

The auto was seen this morning by a tenant on the farm of Roy Harmon, owner of the tract. Harmon visited the woods this afternoon and, recognizing the car, notified Montgomery County officers. The automobile will be towed to Christiansburg tonight for examination for clews.

No trace has been found of the driver and in so far as is known, no one saw the car driven to its hiding place.

Fire Hose Guards Sought.

Frederick, Md., June 2 (AP).—Frederick firemen will ask Mayor Lloyd Culler to approve appointment of six fire police, to be vested with authority to arrest motorists who drive their cars over fire hose. The fire-fighters assert many of their hose lines were badly damaged by drivers at a Frederick Fairgrounds fire last week.

Midshipmen Hear Sermon By Chaplain

Graduating Class Meets at Annapolis Chapel for Last Time.

Captain Evans Assails 'Proxy Americans' in Address.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., June 2.—The graduating class of the Naval Academy gathered for the last time in the chapel today to hear Capt. Sydney K. Evans, chief of the Chaplains Corps of the Navy, berate "proxy Americans" in a baccalaureate sermon.

Parents, relatives, friends and sweethearts from every section of the country crowded the chapel as the former Academy chaplain addressed the midshipmen who were in full uniform. Graduation exercises will be held Thursday.

Urging the midshipmen always to honor the traditions of the Navy, Capt. Evans said:

"In war and in peace, on the sea, in the air, in civilian life as well as in uniform, her sons have proved her title as 'a mother of men.' All reverence forever to every name upon the Navy's honor roll."

He asserted statistics showed the United States was the "most lawless nation in the world," and declared it was no place for "proxy Americans."

"We are not unduly disturbed," he said, "by those, who, whether on a soap box or in a pulpit, in the gullibility of a spurious pacifism and of a lop-sided Christianity, forget that judgment prudence and common sense, as well as lofty purposes, are God given, and who, in the spirit of the Pharisee, misrepresent the ideals and aims, impugn the sincerity and question the motives of those who differ.

"Living in an international fools' paradise, with no complete first-hand knowledge of the facts, using their wish bones instead of their backbones, they seem to have more confidence in the promises of foreigners whose records belie their words, than in the integrity and common honesty of our President, the Congress, and other leaders, who are patiently planning and toiling for solid and lasting results."

Thirteen Marylanders are members of the class that will be graduated from the United States Naval Academy, June 6.

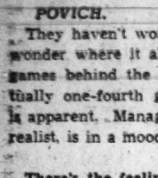
A's Triumph in 9th, 8 to 7, as Nats Lose 7th Straight Game

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

EN ROUTE to Washington With the Nats, June 2.—As traveling companions, the Nats tonight are about as sociable and fraternal as a stuck wildcat. The team hs lost seven stright and the athletes are about as happy as the NRA clerks. Attempting to strike up a conversation is like trying to scratch the surface of a diamond with a tothpick. It isn't being done tonight. The lads are about as talkative as King Tut's mummified pappy.



POVICH.

They don't know what to say—how to discuss those seven straight defeats, so they say nothing. You can cut the glumness with a cheese knife. But they're thinking plenty—you can sense that. Those seven straight lickings set about as nicely with them as a cut in the pay envelopes, and that's not too far-fetched a comparison, either. It might come to that.

They haven't won a ball game in a week, and they're beginning to wonder where it all will end. One game out of seventh place, eight games behind the lead, that's their situation, and the season is virtually one-fourth gone. The old "whither are we drifting" attitude is apparent. Manager Bucky Harris, no sentimentalist, more of a grim realist, is in a mood to fight somebody and he wouldn't be particular.

There's the feeling that if Buck Newsom hadn't come up with that busted knee cap the team might not be in this slump, but they know that Newsom is only one ball player. The team's woes go beyond that. They know they have been functioning like a sixth-place ball club, but worse than that is the lack of hope for the immediate future.

THE time is fast approaching when this department will be constrained to view with alarm. Certainly there has been nothing at which to point with pride. Manager Harris is at his wits' end in his efforts to inject more punch into the batting order, and his pitching problem is beginning to solve itself. At the rate which they have been winning, the Nats will soon have no pitching problem for the reason that they will have no pitchers—only chuckers.

Harris is now operating with a two-man pitching staff. Try and get into the first division with two pitchers, and, if you do it, the G-Men probably will come an dget you for bribery. But at the present writing, the only two fellows from whom Harris can expect a half-decently pitched ball game are Irving Hadley and Earl Whitehill. And even these two don't throw any more fear into the enemy than fright wigs.

The others—Burke, Russell, Linke, Pettit, Bean and Coppola—are not winning pitchers. During the Nats' seven-game losing streak, the opposition scored in the first inning in every game but one. Only once did the Nats hold a lead. That was in today's game when they were in front, 1 to 0, for a half an inning. Then the A's caught up with them.

But the pitchers don't have to take the rap for it all. Don't let the club's batting figures, which show them second in team batting, fool you. Only two of the leds have been hitting with men on bases when hits mean runs. I speak, of course, of Jake Powell and Buddy Myer. The others— Heinie Manush, Joe Kuhel, Johnny Stone, Cecil Travis, Lyn Lary, and Cliff Bolton—have been getting their hits when they did the least good.

HE pitchers won't say so, but there is a great undercurrent of dissatisfaction among 'em with regard to the team's catching. They pine for Luke Sewell, and how on earth Griffith ever let Sewell get away from the Washington Club is something the pitchers will never understand. Griff threw the veteran Sewell into the deal with the Browns for Hadley and the Browns sold him to Chicago for $6,000. The Nats are ruing the Sewell end of the deal every day.

Sewell's departure left the Nats without a full-fledged catcher. Cliff Bolton had never done anything that qualified him for mention in the same breath with Sewell as a defensive backstop, and all that Griff gave Bucky Harris as support for Bolton was a pair of minor leaguers, Sammy Holbrook and Jack Redmond. Both are nice lads.

But the Washington pitchers miss the steadying influence of Sewell behind the bat; Sewell offering 'em that ready target with his big mitt poised where he wanted 'em to throw the ball; Sewell outguessing the hitters, and Sewell knowing all the weaknesses of all the batters. My Gawd, how those Washington pitchers would like to have the confident Sewell behind the bat.

Manager Jimmy Dykes, of the White Sox, makes no qualifications in his praise of Sewell. The veteran catcher's presence, his smartness, his knowledge of the hitters has improved his ball club 50 per cent—no less—says Dykes. And, to hear the Washington pitchers in unguarded moments, Sewell's presence on the White Sox has reduced the effectiveness of the Washington pitching by the same figures—50 per cent.

Husband Kids Amelia Earhart; Says She Refused Autograph

By Paul Gallico.

A Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Random recollections of a gentleman who has had a very interesting couple of weeks:

Flying to Indianapolis with Amelia Earhart and her husband, George Putnam, for the 500-mile race and getting a kick out of listening to Putnam kid the missus. Every time the ship would circle to come into land, Putnam would lean over, pet her hand and say, "Now, mother, don't you be one bit nervous, the driver is just banking to make a turn. There is no danger whatsoever. That is a very good driver we have in the front."

The good driver, incidentally, was Dick Merrill, crack Eastern Air Transport pilot. The same George Putnam suddenly, after a long silence leaning forward, tapping me on the shoulder and muttering, "Gallico, I'm sore," and when I asked him why, replying in a most grieved tone of voice, "I asked Miss Earhart for her autograph and she wouldn't give it to me. Do you suppose all this publicity has gone to her head?" Watching the same Miss Earhart trying not to jump out of her skin while Dick Merrill, who was off his regular run, was hunting for the Pittsburgh municipal airport.

Miss Earhart's admirable restraint when we began to glide into the old Curtiss-Betts Field. She said, "Oh dear, maybe he has some reason for coming into the old field I'd feel like such a fool going up there and telling him where it is, if he knows. Oh dear. There it is over there. Oh I just can't go up there and say anything."

Mr. Putnam said soothingly, "Go right on up, pull him out of the seat and drive it yourself, dear, he won't mind." The lady, finally being unable to restrain herself, going up into the office after we tok off from Curtiss-Betts again, and pointing out the big municipal field.

The enchantingly feminine line pulled by Miss Earhart while we were discussing what pilots thought about on those long, lonely transcontinental and ocean hops when there was nothing to do but hold the duty level and let her fly herself. She said, "Do you know, the only thing I can remember thinking about on the flight up from Mexico City was crossing the Gulf of Mexico. There were a lot of thunderstorms just beginning to stick up their heads. I cut around the edges of these black thunder-heads that hap purple lightning inside of them, and all I could think was, 'How pretty my ship must look against such a background,' and there was nobody there to see it."

Higgins Hits Single for Margin

Three Washington Runs in Final Inning Only Extend Battle.

By Shirley L. Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

SHIBE PARK, Philadelphia, June 2.—Ho hum. The Nats played another ball game today. You guessed. They lost. It's seven straight now.

The futility of the Nats' efforts was expressed in the score of 8-to-7, but it was a fighting finish that they made out of the ball game. Three last ditch Washington runs came clattering across the plate in a gallant ninth-inning uprising and they tied the score, but the Athletics had a run in reserve.

Sixty-eight hundred Philadelphia fans, plunged into despair as they saw pitchers Al Benton and Bill Dietrich toss away the A's three-run lead in the ninth, watched the Mackmen surge back to win the game before a man was out.

Defensive Hero Also.

Manager Bucky Harris had entrusted Leon Pettit with the ball game in the ninth after the Nats had deadlocked the battle at 7-7, and Pettit was a dismal failure. Bob Johnson skidded a single through Lyn Lary's legs and Pettit wild-pitched him to second. Jimmy Foxx drew a walk and Frank Higgins broke up the ball game with a vicious single to left that scored Johnson from second.

This same Johnson was the defensive hero for the A's in the ninth. It was his perfect throw to home plate after fielding Jake Powell's single on which the tying run scored, that nipped Cecil Travis when the latter also attempted to score from second on the blow, thus preventing the Nats from taking the lead.

Belve Bean made his debut on the mound for the Nats' and he was about as effective as a wet match. He found a new way for the club to lose when he chose the fifth inning, at a time when the bases were full, to walk two batters and force two runs across the plate.

Off Bean and Ed Linke and Pettit the A's obtained 11 hits. So did the Nats, but they are still paying off on runs in this league.

For the first time in a week the Nats led the opposition when they scored a run in the first inning after Myer and Manush had led off with singles, but the A's replied with three runs against Bean.

It was a tainted single to short center by Moses that launched the A's offensive, but there was nothing tainted about Foxx's sharp single to left and McNair's whistling drive to center after Bean had walked Johnson.

Two Doubles in Second.

Richards and Moses put together a pair of doubles in the second inning to make it 4-1 for the A's and the Nats busied themselves against Benton. Myer singled to center and Manush singled to right. Stone hit into a force play, but Travis walked to fill the bases with one out. Kuehl's line drive fly to center scored Myer, and Jake Powell slammed a vicious double down the left field line to score Stone. The A's lead was cut to 4-3.

After that, Benton shut the Nats out with one hit for four innings, but the A's came up with awo runs but the A's came up with two runs

Fred Perry Wins French Net Crown

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 2.—England and Germany today divided the French hard court singles crowns, Fred Perry, the English ace, taking the men's coronet and Hilda Krahwinkel Sperling the women's title.

Mme. Sperling received little opposition from Mme. Rene Mathieu, of France, and won in straight sets, 6—2, 6—1, but Perry found a stalwart antagonist in Baron Gottfried von Cramm, German defending title holder. Perry won, 6—3, 3—6, 6—1, 6—3.

The match was easily the most excitable of the tournament which this year was considered more drab than usual.

Ruffing Checks Boston to Annex 4th Victory in Succession.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 2.—The Yankees took a long look at the Sunday crowd in the bleachers today and began popping home runs out among the fans to gain a 7-to-2 victory over the Red Sox in the series final and increase their lead in the American League. By winning they advanced a full game over the Chicago White Sox, who lost to Detroit, 10 to 5.

In all, the Yanks accumulated six homers for all the earned runs they scored while Mel Almada belted one for Boston to deprive Charley (Red) Ruffing of a shut-out. The six circuit swats made the greatest one-game total for any major league club this season and fell just one short of equaling the big-league record.

Bill Dickey led the clouting spree with two of the boundary belts, bringing his season's total up to eight. The others came from the bats of Frank Crosetti, Ben Chapman, George Selkirk and Red Rolfe.

Aided by Werber's Error.

The seventh Yankee run resulted from singles by Chapman and Lou Gehrig and an error by Bill Werber on Alamada's throw to third.

Red Ruffing, chalking up his fourth straight victory and his fifth of the season, granted only eight hits. Fpr the first seven innings not a Boston player got to third and only Moe Berg managed to reach second. In the eighth Babe Dahlgren rapped a single and Almada brought him home with a homer.

Bucs Pound 2 Hurlers To Shut Out Reds, 8-0

Cincinnati, June 2 (AP).—Scoring almost at will off the offerings of Paul Derringer and Tony Freitas, the Pittsburgh Pirates shut out the Cincinnati Reds, 8 to 0, today.

They played five innings in a driving rainstorm, and the remaining four in a drizzle, after a delay of an hour in starting.

The Reds failed to solve the mound work of Big Jim Weaver, while the Pirates, getting away to a one-run lead in the first, bunched three more in the fifth and seventh innings to salt the game away.

Grove and Red Sox Jubilant; Ready for Comeback, He Says

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, June 2.—Lefty Grove, erstwhile fireball king of the majors and one of the greatest southpaws of all time, is ready for a grand pitching comeback, according to statements today by Grove, Manager Joe Cronin and other membres of the Boston Red Sox.

The tip-off came yesterday, they confided, when Lefty registered that 6-0 shutout against the Yankees, breaking Johnny Allen's winning string at five straight.

Long, lean Lefty is back in form again for the first time since the end of the 1933 campaign, just before Connie Mack of the Athletics sold him to the Red Sox. After his disappointing slump in 1934 with Boston, when he won 8 and lost 8, Grove is burning them over again. "It's just one is working.

That fast ball made him the scourge of the American League from 1925 until last year. Such blazing speed that the ball almost bowled over the catchers enabled Lefty to win at least 20 games every season from 1927 until 1933, inclusive. But when a "Charley Horse" in his left shoulder, suffered during 1934 spring training, chopped down his speed, Lefty became just another pitcher—and a comparatively poor one. His shoulder did not respond to treatment until last September. Some of his speed retuned then.

"And now all of its back," Grove declared jubilantly in the dugout todaytoday. "I fogged 'em over full blast for the first time Saturday, and the old arm didn't bother me a bit. Yes sir, I'm okay now."

Cards' Advance To 2d Place Feature

Won 6 Games Last Week; Athletics and Yanks Led American.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 2.—What with Babe Ruth's angry announcement that he intended to retire from active baseball and quit the Braves, the fan on the streeet had little time today for discussion of the ordinary affairs of baseball. But so far as those events were concerned the St. Louis Cardinals were the dominating team of the week.

The Cards put together six consecutive triumphs for their week's work, winding up in a blaze of glory today when Jim Collins belted a homer with the bases loaded to beat the Cubs. They didn't threattn the clouting marks made by some rival clubs which played more games, but they could point to the week's best achievement, an advance from fourth place to second in the National League standings.

A's, Yanks Win Six.

In the American League the slugging of the Athletics and the pitching of the Yankees gave them six victories and two defeats apiece to share the week's lead. The Yanks moved into the lead, ousting the Chicago White Sox, who lost five out of seven games as their hitting slump continued. The A's couldn't get out of seventh place, but they cut Washington's margin to one game.

The Athletics marched off with most of the week's hitting marks as they piled up 90 hits for 58 runs in their eight games. Cleveland made 87 hits, but didn't use them as effectively. In the other league the Phillies pounded out 76 hits for 45 runs, while the Braves went them one better with 81 safe blows.

In the field the Giants' mark of five errors and the sevents of Washington and Detroit were the low marks o fthe two leagues.

Sarazen Drills, Putts Poorly; Says 'Wait'

Swaps Cool Greeting With Dutra; Loos Gets 72, Best for Day.

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, June 2.—Chunky Gene Sarazen putted in his worst form for eight holes before sinking a 25-footer on the ninth at Oakmont Country Club's treacherous course today, just after it had been turned over for practice to the 162 contestants for the 1935 National Open Golf championship.

"It's too early to try real hard," remarked the cocky, two-time winner of the title as he mopped his brow. "We'll have those kinks out of that before the gong starts the parade Thursday."

Gene and his old rival, Walter Hagen, are two of the pros whose earnings as champions caused it once to be regarded as a $100,000 plum.

Mackenzie Looke On.

Roland Mackenzie, young Panama-hatted Washingtonian and former amateur, stalked off with a broad grin after watching the putting and Gene ambled over for driving practice. Mackenzie posted a sub-par round of 70 yesterday. The lowest estimate of the winner's total has been made by Sarazen as four 74's. Many think a 300 will win.

While driving, Sarazen met the California Giant, Olin Dutra, defending champion and a co-favorite to win the three-day test. It was "Howdy Gene" and "Lo Olin"—not quite as cool as Helen Wills might have greeted Suzanne Lenglen a few years ago, but eough so to make one think about such a meeting.

Pretty soon, Dutra, Willie Hunter, now representiing a Culver City, Calif., club, and Bob McDonald, of Chicago, pulled out for a round. Sarazen began digging balls out of the deep, furrowed traps that already have caused the 1934 champ to cry "they ain't fair." Futra had his first practice round yesterday.

The 7,000-yard course, one of the most difficult in the world, was in excellent condition. Workmen, under the supervision of Emil Loeffler, the home pro, were busy roping off the greens and tees about the clubhouse, while others were building tents for officials, refreshments and the press.

Visitors wishing to see their favorites tune up must pay $1.10 to get in and after the tournament starts Thursday will be taxed $2.20.

Ray Mangrum, the indefatigable Los Angeles private tutor, who has been here a month practicing, has been joined by approximately 50

Indians Push Browns Deeper in Cellar, 6-2

St. Louis, June 2 (AP).—The climbing Cleveland Indians pushed St. Louis deeper in the American League cellar today, drubbing the Browns, 6 to 2, before a Sunday crowd kept to 2,000 by lowering skies.

Russell Van Atta started on the mound for the Browns, but a four-run barrage in the seventh sent him to cover, and Bob Weiland finished the game, holding the Cleveland batsmen to three hits in the last two innings.

Track Marks Shattered in C. U. Meet

Miller, Guckeyson Set Records as 1,500 Watch Contests.

By George Considine.

WITH 1,500 spectators looking on, the fourth annual District A. A. U. track and field championships, staged yesterday at the Catholic University Stadium, resulted in a shattering of two District records and the equaling of one other, with C. U. garnering the team honors.

As predicted, youthful Eddie Miller, of Eastern High, high jumping 6 feet 1⅛ inches, eclipsed Navin's former mark of 5 feet and 10 inches.

After boosting his old javelin record of 179 feet 1 inch to 192 feet 1½ inches, Bill Guckeyson, competing unattached, tried again and established a new mark at 196 feet 9¼ inches. Joe Burnett, Gallaudet's stellar trackster, equaled the 1,500-meter mark of 4 minutes 14 seconds established in 1932 by Vinny McDonald, of C. U.

Burnett, who shared double-win honors with Warren Evans, unattached, was the running star of the day. In two of the most exciting finishes ever seen in local track history, the lightning-fast Kendall Greener tore home first in the 800-meter affair besides the 1,500. His serious competition was C. U.'s Joe Hugel and Johnny Liess, Washington Track and Field Club, respectively. It was estimated that Hugel trailed by less than an inch as Burnett broke the tape.

Hornbostel Victor.

In the special feature invitation 800-meter race, which attracted several Olympic prospects, Chuck Hornbostel, of Indiana, outsprinted a fast field to win in 1 minute 53 4-5 seconds. Harry Williamson, University of North Carolina, ran second, and Coleman Headley, crack Marylander, finished third. Bob St. Johns held on to first place for 1½ laps, but couldn't stand up under the blistering pace.

The pole vault finished in a tie between Goffredi, C. U., and Frank Cronin. Both men accomplished

Japanese Trim P. G. A. Pros, Sealing Victory in Final Match

Teams Divide In Morning Doubles

Nakamura Beats Walper for 5-to4 Margin; Houghton Has 68.

By Dave Herman.

ALTHOUGH golf in Japan is only 20 years old, and there are only 100 courses in the entire Land of The Rising Sun, the Nipponese as a six-man team were clever and powerful enough yesterday to defeat the best golfers in this section.

By a count of 5 to 4 the Japanese turned back the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. team captained by Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, at Kenwood Golf and Country Club for their eighth victory of the Coast-to-Coast American tour.

Last night a smiling, almond-eyed chap answering to the name of Kanekichi Nakamura, of the Fujisawa Country Club, Kanagawa-ken, was the toast of Ambassador Hirosi Saito and members of the Japanese Embassy.

Defeats Leo Walper.

It was Nakamura, Open champion of Japan, who provided his teammates with their margin of triumph by conquering Leo Walper, Bethesda driving range professor, 2-up, in the final match of the day just when victory was hanging in the balance.

One down at the turn, the two sides tied at 3½ each. Nakamura overcame Walper's lead, won the tenth to even the match, took the lead for the first time with a birdie 4 on the 488-yard twelfth, took advantage of the American's weird putting on the stretch, and sealed victory with a great par 4 on the home hole.

The morning doubles endede all even, each team amassing 1½ points. Cruickshank and young Benny Loving, Charlottesville, Va., pro, were held to to a tie by Seisui Chin, of Tokyo, and Tommy Miyamato, 31-year-old seasoned campaigner, thanks to a brilliant approach by Chin on the eighteenth hole and his 8-foot putt for 4½ with Loving.

Houghton, Barnett Win.

Al Houghton, host pro, and Bob Barnett, of Chevy Chase, accounted for the lone doubles triumph, clicking off a best ball of 65 to crush Bob Asami and Jack Yasuda, captain, 5 and 4.

Houghton played beautifully, going out in 36, and blazing over the back nine in 32 for a 68—low for the day. Only Loving, with his 69, came close to matching the morning round of the silver-haired Kenwood pro.

Torchy Toda and Nakamura pounded out a 4 and 2 victory over Walper and Al Treder, of Manor, with the Nipponese displaying too much "stuff" for the Yankees on the back nine. Nakamura, accounting for a 71, put over the killing blow on the sixteenth hole with a birdie 3.

Cruickshank Triumphs.

Perturbed no end by his fair-to-middlin' play in the doubles, Cruickshank battled grimly in the afternoon singles, routing Asami, 8 and 6, for the largest count of the day. The Wee Scot, playing his shots as if drawn by some invisible string, went out in 33, to stand 5 up, and ended the Nipponese golfer's misery with a sensational eagle 3 on the twelfth hole. For the 12 holes, the famous Richmond pro was 4 under par. He didn't lose a single hole, and was over par on only one, the ninth.

It was a curling 20-foot putt that gave Wee Bobby his eagle on the twelfth.

Yielding only one hole, the tenth, Houghton crushed Chick Chin, 5 and 4, going out in 35 and finishing in 71, even par. Chin never had a chance with the Kenwood pro, who clicked like a machine on the first nine. After being closed out on the fifteenth, Chin came to life with a 34 on the incoming side.

The fiery-thatched Barnett had to overcome a 3 up lead snatched by Miyamoto at the turn to finish all even with his Japanese rival. Barnett won the eleventh with a par 4 when Miyamoto dumped his drive into a trap, captured the 531-yard thirteenth with a 5 when his foe hit two shots out of bounds, and evened the battle with a par 4 at the fifteenth.

Both sank long putts for halves in birdie 3s on the "punch bowl" sixteenth, halved the short seventeenth in par 3s. On the home hole Barnett's second shot hit on the green and bounced over. He pitched back too strongly, and his best was a 5. Miyamoto was 10 feet short of the green in 2, chipped within 3 feet of the pin. He had a great chance to win the match, but his putt missed the cup by inches. Both had 74s.

Loving, Treder Bow.

Loving and Treder were defeated by counts of 5 and 4. Yasuda walloped Loving with a great display of iron play and putting, and 21-year-old Toda, hailed as the best prospect on the team, bounced out Treder.

Both Japanese players sank 15-footers on the fourteenth hole to close out their American rivals. Yasuda shot a 36 to stand 3 up on Loving at the tenth. He sank an 8-footer for a birdie and win on the twelfth. He was one over par for the 14 holes.

Toda actually shot the best 18 holes of the afternoon—a 70. He rang up three birdies on the Manor pro after five holes had been played, went out in 35 to become 3 up, and picked up birdies on the twelfth and fourteenth. Playing out he birdied the fifteenth, but took a 5 on the sixteenth and a 5 on the home hole.

D. C. Exhibitors Triumph in Dog Show

By M. W. Meier.

ONE of the most beautiful dog shows ever staged in America was held yesterday by the Talbot County Kennel Club, on the sightly island estate of Mrs. E. S. Schuyler, Bruff's Island, Md. It was a minature Morris-and-Essex affair with 453 entries.

Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Eastern Shore society turned out in force to make the affair one of those successful events which will long be talked of.

Among Washington visitors, Raymond Brown scored with his Doberman pair, mother and daughter; Dr. Louis Cornet and his wife drew laurels for their quartet of daschshunds; Mrs. Aubrie Bywater won the novice class with her splendid young dane, Bengal Chief, and Mrs. George Berner, jr., won the limit class with her harlequin dane.

Hunt's Setter Scores.

Harry Hunt, showing a splendid English setter, Sundown Visitor, of Huntstone, for H. C. Armstrong, won winner's reserve in a class which was dominated by numerous entries from the Minton kennels, Philadelphia.

Retrievers Plentiful.

One of the features of the show was the unusual entry of Chesapeake retrievers. Most of these were owned by Eastern shore residents and they made a brave showing, which would have delighted Freeman Lloyd and other authorities on this little-known breed.

Best in show went to that fine animal, Champion Blue Dan of Happy Valley, owned by Dr. Mitten, of Philadelphia. Dan was a sensation at the local show here this spring.

Harvard Gridder Signed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., June 2.—The Keswick Horse Show, one of the most colorful exhibitions in the 50-year history of the Keswick Hunt Club, closed near midnight last night. Six classes were on the night program, which was witnessed by a large gallery.

There were 23 entries in the opening event, the open-to-all stake class, in which jumping and manners only counted. The blue ribbon was pinned on Lee's Birthday, a bay gelding owned by George Lee, of Norfolk. Second place was given Round Hill, a gray gelding shown by James N. Andrews, of Somerset.

The Edgehill Trophy, offered by Col. and Mrs. E. D. Tayloe, of Keswick, in the class for five gaited saddle horses, went to No Limit, a gray gelding owned by J. J. McIntyre, Cleveland magnate, who has a stable known as the Hobby Horse Farm, located near Hollins, Va.

Dixie's Child Victor.

Eight horses competed in the 5-foot class, the horses being shown over two jumps, one 4½ feet and one 5 feet, performance only counting. First prize money went to Dixie's Child, owned by James G. Greims, of Keswick, formerly of Florida. Second was W. B. Bogert's Gay Cockade, a winner last year at Canadian shows.

The hunt team from Edgewood Farm, Cobham, was adjudged the winner in the hunt team class, and was awarded the Castalia Trophy, offered by Murray Boocock, the new president of the Keswick Hunt Club.

The Kinloch Trophy, presented by Mr. and Mrs. Linton R. Massey, in the Corinthian class, open to all hunters, was won by James N. Andrews' Round Hill, a gray gelding by High Hand.

U. S. Davis Cup Team Better Than 1934's, Says Nusslein

By the Associated Press.

HAVERFORD, Pa., June 2.—You can take it from Hans Nusslein, the German professional, who put the 1934 and 1935 players through their preliminary paces, America stands a better chance of recapturing the international tennis Davis Cup from Great Britain than the racquet-wielding nephews of Uncle Sam did this time a year ago.

In his opinion the five-man squad which will sail from New York Wednesday for England, the Wimbledon championships and to meet the winner of the European zone final for the right to challenge England, is keener, in better physical condition and better equipped all around than last year's representatives.

The squad includes only one of the 1934 internationalists — Sidney Wood, jr.—and for the others, Wilmer Allison, Johnny Van Ryn, J. Donald Budge and Gene Mako. Nusslein rates them slightly above Frank Shields, George Lott, jr., and Lester R. Stoefen, who with Wood formed the unsuccessful 1934 contingent.

"Sidney Wood is playing better. He's in better physical condition and has a newly found backhand which should serve him usefully," Nusslein said. "Allison is by far a sounder player than Shields was, and the tennis he has played here is better than I've ever seen him play—even better than he showed against Fred Perry in the finals at Forest Hills last year.

"In my opinion, the United States hasn't suffered an irreparable loss, as some think, in Lott and Stoefen, who have turned professional. As a matter of fact, America has plenty of good doubles teams, and I honestly think Allison and Van Ryn are every bit as good as Lott and Stoefen were as amateurs."

Canzoneri Halts Supervision of His N. Y. Estate To Predict Klick Will Offer a Tough Fight Here

(The second of a series of stories gathered on a tour of camps of fighters participating in principal bouts this month. In a previous article the writer described the camp and training methods of Jim Braddock.)

By Bill McCormick.

IT was the original intention of the writer to visit the training camps of Signor Tony Canzoneri, Mistuh Joe Louis, Mein Freund Maxie Baer, Mister James Jay Braddock and Signor Primo Carnera. Always one to start out in a big way, it struck him that the conditioning quarters of Ponderous Primo would be the logical point at which to begin the junket.

"Where is Carnera training for this Louis bout?" he asked Broadway wise guy No. 1.

"Why, he's training at Osegow . . . Osewaga . . . some place way up in New York State, was the answer as B. W. G. No. 1 groped around, ashamed to admit his ignorance.

Broadway Wise Guy No. 2 was approached with the same question.

"That's easy, he's over at . . . now let me see, he's up at . . . say, come to think of it, is he training at all?" was the answer of B. W. G. No. 2 to our query.

Far From New York.

Officials of the Twentieth Century Club, which is promoting Primo's bout with Joe Louis, June 25, finally told us where Carnera was training—and we discovered the spot is hundreds and hundreds of miles from New York—just a few feet south of the Arctic Circle, from all accounts.

"Why is Carnera training so far away from the center of things?" was the next question to be answered.

"His manager, Billy Duffy, is under obligations to somebody up there," was one answer.

Friends Can't Reach Him.

"When Primo trained down near New York, he worked hard all through the week," our Italian friend explained. "Then when Sunday came around just about every Italian friend of his in New York came up to camp and started eating spaghetti and drinking dago red with him. By Monday, Da Preem's training was back where it had started. This time they decided to put him where his friends and relatives couldn't reach him over the week-end."

And thus it was that we omitted Carnera's camp from our travels and found ourselves in the Marlboro camp of Tony Canzoneri, just a few miles above Newburgh, N. Y.

Tony himself was discovered standing on the porch of the 60-room resort hotel which is practically finished on his estate, looking very much like Napoleon as he issued orders to a mob of workmen.

Expects Good Fight.

"Never mind the people," we retaliated. "What about this fight down in Washington, June 10? What are you going to do to Klick?"

"Oh, yes, Klick," replied the New Orleans noggin knocker, tossing a brick at a workman who was lagging. "Klick'll give me a good fight, he always has. Why, even in the last fight, which was stopped when he got a badly puffed eye, he kept giving me a good fight after the eye was closed. He'll give me a good fight."

"What training are you doing for it?"

"Oh, the same as I always do. Five-six miles of roadwork every morning, plenty of outdoor exercise and a couple rounds on the light and heavy bags."

"Who's working with you?" we inquired.

"Oh, nobody yet," replied the lightweight champion in scandalized tones. "I never start to box until a few days before a fight. I only need a little sharpening up on my boxing."

144 Acres In Estate.

"Lookit it," he insisted, waving the right arm which felled Ambers twice in a vague circle. "Just lookit it—144 acres and all mine. Over there, 2,500 fruit trees. Over there, 6,000 grape vines."

Before he could be shut off, the lightweight champion had informed us that he had cows, goats, sheep, bulls, calves and four horses. "An' I'm scared to death of the horses."

"Lissen," we insisted. "We didn't come up here for a course in farming. We came to find out just how you expected to do in that bout against Klick."

"I'll lick him, of course," replied Tony, not boastingly, but confidently, like a champion. "You don't know what that title means to me. Right after I lost it to Ross, it didn't seem to make much difference. Because I knew I was going to fight Barney again. Then he beat me in a return.

Listless, Sluggish.

"After that something just seemed to go out of me. I was listless and sluggish, not only in the gymnasium but in the ring. Guys that didn't belong in the same ring with me gave me an awful tussle. Then I was matched to fight Ambers for the title again. That puts something back in me. You saw me in there against Lou, didn't you? Well, you know I probably never fought a much better fight in my life.

"That peak I reached in the Ambers fight is still with me. I find myself figuring and scheming in the gymnasium and out of it how to beat Klick. That's the way I was before I ever lost the title—and that's the way I'll stay until I lose it again. It's just too bad for Frankie that I ever got back my lightweight championship, otherwise he might have beaten me in Washington."

In Fine Condition.

Canzoneri undoubtedly is in the best of physical condition. His mental attitude is the important thing. The writer had thought he would let down for the Klick fight—that it would be just another boxing match to him. Just hear Canzoneri explain what the title means to him, and what it means to him to win, now that he is champion again, and one can see that this is not the case.

Under the circumstances, we can do nothing but change our previous prediction on the fight, which was that Klick would take a decision, and pick Canzoneri to trounce Klick soundly. We shall see.

(What happened to Max Baer's $8,800, when he lost the key to the safety deposit box? That will be told in tomorrow's article on the champion's training camp at Asbury Park.)

Ruth Is Dropped In Braves' Dispute

when Ruth failed to get a share of the Braves' spring training receipts, which amounted to about $50,000.

After Fuchs learned of Ruth's decision to en, for a time at least, his spectacular 21-year career, he told intimates that he too, was willing to quit the Braves.

Would Also Quit.

"Bill McKechnie and I have come to certain conclusions about the Braves," he said, "and I would gladly step out this minute if I was assured that some reliable sportsman would take over the club, protect the small stockholders and refuse to sell our best players."

Fuchs' position with the club, due to financial reverses, has been a perilous one for some time. Early in April his note for a large amount came due at a Boston Bank, but he gained an extension on the strength of Ruth's undisputed drawing powers.

Early last month it became known that Charles F. Adams, vice president and controlling stockholder of the Braves, had served notice on Fuchs that the latter would either pick up the stock he is holding as collateral for a large loan and purchase all Adams' holdings at a bargain price or get out of the club's affairs without further ado.

August 1 Deadline.

Adams, owner of the two Boston hockey clubs, dominating figure in the new $1,500,000 Suffolk Downs race track and the head of a huge grocery chain, set August 1 as the deadline in his ultimatum to the harassed Fuchs, who has been head of the Braves since 1925.

When the Braves obtained Ruth from the New York Yankees early this year, and he returned to Boston, his old home, as a conquering hero, he was feted in extravagant style by Fuchs.

At that time, according to Ruth's friends, the home-run slugger was under the impression that he was about to realize his crowning ambition of ending his baseball years as a big league manager.

Warned by Adams.

If, however, he had any idea that he was about to succeed McKechnie as pilot of the Braves, it was knocked out of his head in short order by Adams, who warned him that he would have to prove his worth to get the job.

"I want to tell you, Babe," Adams said, "that if I am ever forced to assume full control of the Boston Braves, I will turn my baseball interests over to Bill McKechnie and give him a free hand in running the club. If that time ever comes and you have proved yourself capable of giving orders to others, you will be given a chance to realize your managerial ambitions."

Babe Ruth Out, Braves Stop Giants, 2-0

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, June 2.—Playing without the services of the ailing Babe Ruth, who announced after the game that he was retiring from the team, the Boston Braves today subjected the New York Giants to their first shutout of the season, 2 to 0. The defeat snapped the visitors' victory streak at seven.

Bobby Smith, veteran Boston right-hander, gave the Giants eight hits, but the tight defensive play of his mates prevented scoring. The Braves were able to get only three hits off Clyde Castleman in seven innings, but managed to push over a run in the sixth when Bill Urbanski walked, went to second on Baxter Jordan's infield out and scored on Hal Lee's single to left.

own making. With one out, he dropped Kuhel's perfect throw to first base on Cramer's grounder, and Cramer was safe. Johnson's double to right pushed Cramer to third, and Bean was ordered to walk Foxx and fill the bases. He seemed to be out of the hole when he forced Higgins to pop a foul to Kuhel for the second out, but he wasn't.

It was at this point, with the bases still full, that he forced over a run by walking McNair and another by walking Warstler. Ed Linke finally got the side out, but the A's had boosted their lead to 6-3.

It was 7-3 in the seventh when McNair doubled against Linke and Warstler scored him with a single to center, but the Nats came up with a run in the eighth when Powell followed Travis' walk with his second double of the game.

Nats' Hopes Revive.

The Nats' hopes ebbed rapidly in the ninth when pinch hitter Bluege grounded out, but Buddy Myer revived 'em with a single to center. Manush walked and when Stone singled to right to score Myer, and put the tying run on base, Manager Mack got Benton out of there.

In came Bill Dietrich to be saluted with a single to right by Travis that scored Manush and put Stone on third with the tying run. The bases were full when Kuhel drew a walk and Powell met the test with a slashing single to center that scored Stone with the tying run. When Travis also attempted to score from second on the blow, Bob Johnson's perfect throw from left field cut him down at the plate.

Lyn Lary was of no help at this point, despite his blistering drive back into the box which Dietrich finally fielded for a putout at first. When the A's came to bat in the ninth you know what happened.

Joe Stankus Turns Back Rivals

Pig 'n Whistle Is Victor; Three Games in Tie in Section B.

THE POST ASSOCIATION pennant aspirations of Tony Burruto's Blue Flame Valet Shop team burned with renewed hope yesterday following its decisive victory over the hitherto unbeaten Murphy's 5 & 10 Store in an 8-3 game, featured by the brilliant pitching of Joe Stankus.

A crowd of 5,000 sandlot fans saw the Valets unloosen a barrage of base blows in the fourth inning for five runs, which sewed up the game as Stankus settled down after the first round and granted only two hits thereafter.

Willie Wolfe and Thomas Belt were the leaders in a smashing 23-hit offensive by the Pig 'N Whistle team, which routed the Rinaldi Coal men, 19 to 6, and maintained its undefeated record and first-place possession in Section A of the National City League.

Miller Furniture spent most of its in an 11-run scoring spree in the first inning of its game with Cherner Motor, which was wrecked by a 16-4 score. George Mosedale, on the mound for the Union Printers, shared honors with Eddie Edwards, Ray Homan and Charlie Holbrook, as the Typos registered their first win of the season against the Army Medicos 16 to 7.

Tie In Section B.

Section B leaders continued to set a winning pace, and the same triumverate, Stansbury, Woodmen of the World and Capital Transit remain deadlocked in first place. Behind the masterful 2-hit pitching performance of Charlie Booker, the Woodmen of the World, Elm Camp, shut out the Warwicks, 5 to 0, and virtually doomed the latter's first half title ambitions.

Aided materially by the timely hitting of Sullivan, G. Keyser and Beach, Foster Mathias outpitched Charlie Whitt by a shade as Capital Transit squeezed out a 4-3 victory over the Georgetown A. C.

William Tayman, with a home run, double and two singles in six trips to the plate garnered individual honors in Stansbury's easy 15-2 score over Lewis Ice Cream. District Grocery won by a forfeit over David's Grill, when the latter failed to place a team on the field.

Farm Girl 'Pines' For Stella Walsh

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, June 2.—Helen Stephens, Missouri farm girl track sensation, gladly would race Stella Walsh on home ground in Cleveland if the latter is willing, she said today.

"I'm badly disappointed," she said, "that Stella didn't appear against me in yesterday's races. But I'll race her any place, any time. I'll go to her home town if she likes."

Helen, lacking the impetus of competition that was promised by Stella here yesterday, didn't do so bad at that. She tied one world record and broke one national and one Ozark district record in the A. A. U. women's meet. She equaled the world record of 11.8 seconds in the 100-meter race set by Stella in Poland in September, 1933.

BALLSTON rallied yesterday to defeat Falls Church, 5 to 4, for its fifth straight victory in the White Section of the Northern Virginia League.

Manassas remained on the heels of the leaders by disposing of Arlington, 7 to 4, and Herndon registered its first triumph in Post Association competition by upsetting Middleburg, 7 to 6, by virtue of a last-inning two-run rally, climaxed by Bob Beans' double to left center field.

Fairfax Station strengthened its grip on top place in the Red Section by shutting out Marshall, 7 to 0, as Albert Mahoney, its ace hurler, granted only four scattered hits. It was the first shut-out of the season in the Virginia loop. Vienna jumped back into the running for first-half honors, defeating Millwood 9 to 3, and Aldie surprised Purcellville by taking a 4-to-3 decision.

Find Range Late.

Apparently helpless during the first six innings against the southpaw pitches of Bob Lyons when hits meant runs, the Ballston batsmen, particularly Bowman, Joe Miller, Spitzer and Walter Ruding, found the range in the late innings. Lem Owen went to the rescue of tiring Calvin Hull in the final round and held the Democrats at bay, despite a threatening gesture at the last minute. Ike Dreifus and Adger Adair turned in a nice pitching performance between them in Manassas' triumph. Jack Saunders and Buckner led the hitting. The Thompson boys and Jarman were conspicuous figures in Vienna's attack, as was Jack Mahoney in Fairfax's victory.

Riverton, Va., June 2.—Tallying six times in the last two innings, the Front Royal All-Stars nosed out the Federal Bureau of Investigation of Washington here this afternoon, 10 to 9. The Stars overcame a seven-run lead piled up by the visitors in the first four innings.

Boerner was the victim of two early rallies by the visitors that netted seven runs. The Stars tallied four times in the eighth to pull within a single run of a tie, and two runs in the ninth on a hit batsman, a walk and singles by Stevens and Cassell. Singman and Russell hit homers for the visitors. The relief pitching of Bobby Cassell was outstanding.

Exhibit Home in Shepherd Development Crowded With Visitors.

With the first Washington Post model home in Shepherd Park selling a day after its first display, The Post presented a second exhibit dwelling in that development yesterday. The house at 1520 Locust road northwest, was crowded with visitors throughout the day.

The home has a stately hall with stairway, amply proportioned living room with fireplace, well-lighted dining room, "all-electric" kitchen, three large bedrooms, two baths and a large-sized basement recreation room. It will be open daily until 9 p. m.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

A bunch of time changes and other program deviations had best be reported first:

Blanche Sweet's beauty talks shift to new time and are heard hereafter on WJSV at 10:15 a. m.

Another Columbia feature makes a debut today. "Five Star Jones," a dramatic serial based on the life of a newspaper reporter, may be heard on WABC, New York, at 11:45 p. m. Not carried locally.

New York's official welcome to the French Line's S. S. Normandie, are broadcast at 11:45 a. m. WMAL and 12 noon WJSV.

Musical best bets:

The British Broadcasting Corporation Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arturo Toscanini, is short-waved from Queen's Hall, London, through WRC, 4 p. m.

Margaret Speaks, American soprano, is heard on WRC, 7:30 p. m.

You'll see, too, the wisdom of buying instruments thoroughly reconditioned or rebuilt by Kimball factory experts, including guaranteed service without additional cost following purchase. These Kimball advantages are seldom realized in dealings elsewhere, while the additional expense contingent in purchasing pianos at auction or private sale reacts severely upon the price of so-called bargains.
Visit KIMBALL'S before you buy; not afterward. 721 Eleventh st. nw., 3 doors north of Palais Royal.

"Cap" Stubbs — Always Helping — By Edwina

Once Overs

By H. I. Phillips

Is the President Downhearted?

President Roosevelt, Little Nira and the Blue Eagle may be having a little laugh behind the scenes, at that.

• • • •

Despite the seeming distress in front of the asbestos curtain, it is more than possible that they had anticipated the Supreme Court decision and are not as broken-hearted as would appear.

• • • •

The President is a lawyer and has read the Constitution. He knew how vulnerable the NRA was and there are indications that the best he had hoped for from the start was five innings and no rain checks.

• • • •

Nira had accomplished considerable for such a young child, and the Blue Eagle established a pretty decent altitude record for a bird that was never very happy in politics anyhow.

• • • •

After all, it was two years before Nira was pronounced dead and that court decision must have seemed to the Democrats a lot like declaring a life-preserver a non-union product after the drowning man had been saved.

• • • •

After a man has gone over Niagara Falls in a barrel and lived, he doesn't complain much if the committee on cooperage examines the barrel and pronounces it useless for yachting purposes.

• • • •

Mr. Roosevelt must have known that the law was full of holes, but so is the best wire netting anybody can buy.

• • • •

The Democrats may be secretly as well pleased over the Supreme Court ruling as the Republicans. They were the ones that had the puzzle in their laps and they had about concluded that it was time to close under the heading of necessary experiments and open under the head of regular business.

• • • •

The Supreme Court may turn out to have been a rescue party for Roosevelt, for country and for Harvard, to say nothing of Yale, the various agricultural colleges and and Columbia, the gem of quaint notions.

• • • •

Few are the business men who are not willing to admit that some necessary reforms were brought about under NRA, that some of the benefits would not have been realized in two short years by any pussy-footing methods, and that a good scare did us all some good.

• • • •

The Supreme Court has torn out the new steering wheel, put in an old-fashioned compass and ordered the vessel back into port. But the storm was over anyhow.

Fishy.

The sea is full of little songs
Of fish in constant motion.
If all of them should sing at once
Imagine the commotion!
SARA A. GARRATT.

Mr. John Pierpont Morgan will not put his famous yacht Corsair overboard this summer. This is going to make the owner of a powerboat feel pretty guilty this season.

• • • •
